18 Millions Loss in Wheat Is Toll of Dust In Panhandle

Closed Schools, Stalled Trains Left in Wake of Storm.

Motorists, Halted, Need Lights in Day

Woman Suffocated as New Barrage Swirls Down on Dixie.

The Dust Peril

Choking, devastating dust storms contined to spread their pall over much of the Southwest yesterday, and extended over a large part of Dixie.

The death of one Oklahoma woman was attributed to the soil-laden air, and deaths of several other elderly persons were believed to have been hastened by it.

Trains were stalled and automobile and bus traffic greatly curtailed.

Many millions of dollars loss has been suffered by wheat farmers.

Spurred by a surprisingly low crop estimate by the Government, traders at Chicago bid wheat up to new marks. May wheat closed at 97⅞ cents a bushel and September at 96¾ cents.

Families were reported fleeing from three States, seeking new locations.

By the Associated Press.

Kansas City, Mo., April 11.—Out of the choking clouds which still hung like a pestilence over thousands of square miles in the Southwest—in the brewing spot of big dust storms—reports emerged Thursday night of rapidly mounting losses in wheat, "the money crop."

Piece by piece the gloomy picture came from the area where the storm was concentrated—southeastern Colorado, southeastern Kansas, northwestern Oklahoma and the Texas Panhandle.

It was tempered in part by reports elsewhere. The big wheat acres of north central Kansas maintained a favorable outlook. Rain and snow raised hopes in the northwestern tier of States.

$18,000,000 Loss Seen.

Walter Barlow, Amarillo grain elevator operator, estimated the wheat crop damage in the Texas Panhandle to range between $18,000,000 and $20,000,000 based on current prices.

Harry B. Cordell, president of the Oklahoma Board of Agriculture, declared that most of Oklahoma's "best wheat" is ruined. He referred specifically to Alfalfa and Garfield Counties, but farmers there denied the crop had been destroyed.

The April 1 condition of wheat in Kansas was officially reported as 47 per cent of normal, with a forecast yield of 78,290,000 bushels, contrasting with 79,700,000 bushels last year, itself a short crop.

Families Flee Homes.

Three States reported flights of families from stricken areas.

More than 100 families were on their way to new homes from Cimarron and Texas Counties, in the Oklahoma Panhandle. There a cough-inducing pall still hung low.

In eastern New Mexico farmers were leaving Union County. One

Woman Tosses Son, 9, to Death

Nazi Mother, Penniless, Tells of Throwing Boy, Infant Girl Off Train.

By the United Press.

Berlin, April 11.—A distraught mother confessed to police today that, spurred by the misery of extreme poverty, she had thrown her 9-year-old son and infant daughter off a train while on the way to Unna Hagen, Westfalen.

The boy, Egon, was killed. The 3-month baby sister, Crista, was gravely injured, but Egon, clutching her in terrorized frenzy, cushioned her fall with his body and saved her life.

The woman, Frau Elizabeth Freundlich, 31, at first claimed the door to the coach opened accidentally and the children fell out. However, grilled for hours by police, she admitted throwing her children from the train. She said she had intended to jump off herself but lost her nerve.

Panic-stricken, she pulled the cord instead, stopping the train and hysterically told the conductor of the "accident." She said she was on her way to visit the grave of her first husband.

The mother's action recalled the case of Charlotte Jeuneman, 24, sentenced March 30 to be beheaded for allowing her three children to starve to death. She withheld the relief food and milk sent for them and spent the money in drinking. The fact she is an expectant mother may save her from the ax.

16-1 Silver Bill Gains Support; Markets Rise

Cotton Price Up $2 a Bale; Senate Expansionists to Meet Monday.

By Robert C. Albright.

While silverites scrapped over credit for the President's domestic silver price raise, expansionist sentiment intensified yesterday at the Capitol, and a 16-to-1 white metal bill was unanimously approved by the Senate Agriculture Committee.

A mildly inflationary pulse beat in commodity markets. Senator Key Pittman of Nevada, sponsor of the London silver agreement, flatly forecast $1.29 silver. The Treasury gave every indication of maintaining its silver purchases.

Developements were:

1. Opposing a bill by Senator Pat McCarran, of Nevada, to repeal nationalization, regulation and taxation of silver under the silver purchase act, Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau said such action would cripple this Government's hand in protecting its monetary system.

2. Senator Pittman predicted an "orderly" upward movement in white metal prices, stabilization of silver at $1.29 "within a very few months," and ulitmate opening up of the mints of the world to free and unlimited silver coinage.

3. Approving the Wheeler bill, the Senate Agriculture Committee asked purchase of 50,000,000 ounces of silver a month until the metal reaches one-fourth the value of Treasury gold and silver stocks, or until 16 ounces of silver equals purchasing power of 1 ounce of gold.

4. Senator Elmer Thomas, of Oklahoma, Senate inflationist leader, called a meeting of the Senate expansionist bloc for next Monday night, when silver, the bonus, monetary legislation and bolstered farm prices will be discussed.

5. Partly traceable to the President's 71-cent silver proclamation, silver rose almost 2 cents an ounce, cotton climbed nearly $2 a bale, and wheat jumped about 4 cents a bushel, but fell off.

Various Senate silverites claimed the credit for the silver price increase. Senator Pittman said it was mostly due to a memorandum he sent to the Treasury Wednesday. Senator McCarran said it directly resulted from his bill to repeal several sections of the silver purchase act. Senator Thomas said it was brought to a head by a combination of Senate silver movements.

Secretary Morgenthau laughingly explained that the 6-cent jump in newly-mined' silver avoided the need for almost daily proclamations to keep pace with the rising world price. He said he thought Ameri-

Quotas Urged For Japanese Cotton Goods

Textile Chiefs Hold Import Ban Necessary With NRA and AAA.

By Franklyn Waltman, Jr.

Difficulties of the cotton textile industry, especially in New England, yesterday threatened to become another disturbing factor in relations between Japan and the United States.

This became apparent when it was learned that the strongest kind of pressure is being brought to bear on the Administration and New England Representatives in Congress to place cotton cloth imports from Japan on a quota basis as an alternative for repeal of the cotton processing tax.

Cotton textile interests are demanding that the Administration either repeal the AAA pprocessing tax, modify restrictions placed on the industry by the NRA or limit at once cotton cloth imports from Japan. With arrival in the Capital today of a group of New England Governors concerned over condition of the textile industry in their States, pressure for undertaking one of these steps is expected to increase.

Tokyo Expresses Concern.

On heels of a statement in Tokyo by Eiji Amau, Japanese foreign office spokesman, expressing serious concern over the increasing tendency in the United States to restrict Japanese imports, Hirosi Saito, Nippon's Ambassador to the United States, yesterday spent an hour with Secretary of State Cordell Hull and Assistant Secretary Francis Sayre, discussing trade problems between the two countries.

To what extent the remarkably rapid increase in Japanese sales of cotton cloth in this country and clamor here for restricting those imports were discussed was not revealed. But Mr. Saito called attention to the fact that Japan has become one of this country's best customers for raw cotton.

Leaving Mr. Hull's office, the Japanese diplomat said he was certain that friendly and profitable trade relations between his country and the United States would continue, that no real causes for any friction existed and that there was no need for the negotiating of a reciprocal trade agreement under the Hull program.

Triangular Trade Cited.

Mr. Saito further pointed out that his country purchased almost twice as much from the United States as the latter did from Japan. Thus, he contended, Japan had to balance its foreign trade by making sales elsewhere, possibly in Latin America. He said Japan and the United States were in agreement in the belief that stimulation of triangular

Gag Cry Fails, House Leaders Fix Procedure on Social Bill

By Douglas Warrenfels.

Protests of House left-wingers that they were being gagged were unavailing yesterday as Democratic leaders drove through a rule which specified procedure to be followed on the social security bill.

After the shouting died down observers found it difficult to predict which side ultimately would be able to prove it was right in its interpretation of the rule.

Champions of the Townsend $200-a-month-pension scheme and the Lundeen unemployment insurance proposal argued the rule approved by 289 to 103 over their protest would enable Representative McReynolds, chairman of the Committee of the Whole, to hold their amendments were out of order.

Chairman O'Connor of the Rules Committee and other Administration leaders contended they had enough votes to defeat the radical amendments and would not seek to deny direct votes on those issues.

"This is an open rule if I ever saw one," O'Connor insisted.

A special meeting of the Democratic steering committee was called to discuss the charges that a "left-handed gag" was to be employed. Later Chairman Sabath observed:

"We're willing for all amendments to be put to a vote. We think the Ways and Means Committee has enough influence to defeat any amendment it considers undesirable.

"We don't think a point of order would lie against either the Townsend bill or the Lundeen bill, but if it would and if anyone makes a point of order we'll try to have it withdrawn so those bills will be put to a vote."

Cities Plead For Control Of Job Plan

Mayors Visit Roosevelt to Urge Right to Handle Fund.

50% Grants Studied by Ickes to Speed Flow of Cash.

By Leon Dure, Jr.

Fearful lest the cities be forced to carry their own relief load under the pending works program, the executive committee of the United States Conference of Mayors yesterday laid before President Roosevelt a proposal to let the cities handle a lion's share of work-relief.

They pointed out the fact that the bulk of unemployment is concentrated in the larger, industrial cities, and the further fact that only $900,000,000 of the $4,880,000,000 fund for work-relief is earmarked for loans and grants to States and political subdivisions.

What they want, they told the President, is a "balance" of expenditures with respect to centers of unemployment, and to that end they suggested the fullest possible decentralization of the program, with the cities handling a large proportion of new works projects.

Mr. Roosevelt's reaction to this suggestion was not stated, but according to Mayor Fiorello H. LaGuardia, of New York, who acted as spokesman, it was a "very satisfactory and encouraging talk." Another of the mayors said the President approved the idea that employment be found in cities instead of transporting workers to outlying areas.

Meanwhile, a standing committee was named by the conference of mayors to advise with the Administration on the works program. members chosen to this group, it was learned, are LaGuardia, Mayor Frederick W. Mansfield of Boston and Mayor Howard W. Jackson of Baltimore with Paul V. Betters, as conference director, to serve as liaison officer.

Earlier in the day PWA administrator Harold L. Ickes revealed he is studying the possibility of raising public works grants to States and cities from 30 per cent of materials and labor to 50 per cent. Under present procedure, 30 per cent is granted cities and 70 per cent is advanced as a loan.

Following their call at the White House, the visiting mayors retired to the Mayflower Hotel, where Relief Administrator Harry L. Hopkins was closeted with them for almost an hour. On dispersing, they issued a statement advising municipalities to prepare projects of work-relief in advance of the new program.

Work for Employable.

"We have formulated certain suggestions which will assure the giving of work to the employable persons on relief in industrial centers of the country," the mayors stated. "As is well known, the relief load is largely centered in the urban communities of the Nation. These suggestions were transmitted to the President.

"After a very satisfactory conference with the President, we feel that steps will be taken to insure the carrying out of the task of giving work to the employables on relief. . . ."

The proposals laid before Mr. Roosevelt were not made public, but it was indicated the mayors told him a large volume of employment can be created in almost every large city by such projects as street improvement, new sewerage systems and waterworks. Work

Paris, London Clash at Stresa Over Hitler as Germans Warn Accords Must Grant Equality

Spokesman Says Nation Will Join Powers in Disarmament.

Ready to Sign Pacts With Her Neighbor

But Memel Issue Must First Be Settled With Lithuania.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 11.—A government spokesman said tonight Germany would participate in any future negotiations for disarmament or security pacts only "on the basis of complete equality."

His statement came shortly after other official sources asserted the proposed Franco-Russian agreement for mutual assistance, coupled with the announcement that Italy intends to keep 600,000 soldiers under arms for the present, killed the Stresa conference at its inception.

Asked to summarize conditions upon which Germany would participate in security or disarmament negotiations, the official, declaring his explanation "the absolute official policy of Adolf Hitler," said:

"Disarmament—Quite simple: We are willing to join conventions and help make such a treaty on the basis of full equality.

"If the others want heavy guns, we want heavy guns. If the others want bombing planes, we want bombing planes. If the others cut their armaments, we will cut, too.

"Our demands for an army of 36 divisions, 35 per cent of Great Britain's navy and equality in the air are quite reasonable.

"This is the line Hitler took when he talked to Foreign Secretary Sir John Simon of Great Britain. We never would have asked for more arms if the others had come down to our level. The 100,000 men allotted to us by the Versailles Treaty would have been sufficient.

Stand on Security.

"Security—we are willing to sign nonaggression pacts with all our neighbors except Lithuania. When the Memel question is solved then we will be ready to make such an agreement with Lithuania. Hitler further told Simon we are willing to bring these bilaterals pacts into a general pact.

"The Eastern pacts we consider unnecessary as we have treaties with Russia and Poland. But we

U. S. Gold Stock Reaches New Peak

Sharp Rise Increases Total to $8,614,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

A sharp rise of $46,000,000 in the monetary gold stock of the country brought the total on April 10 to $8,614,000,000, the highest peak ever reached in this country.

The level, as shown by the weekly condition statement of the Federal Reserve Bank, was $882,000,000 higher than on the comparable period of last year.

Member banks' reserve balances likewise showed a sharp advance during the week, a rise of $94,000,000 bringing the total to $4,287,000,000, an amount about $2,000,000,000 in excess of legal requirements.

Mayor Asks Bonding to Avert Lyddane Lawyers' Fistic Tilt

Rockville to Get Bad Name, He Fears; Anonymous Letters to Mrs. Beale to Be Compared With Principals' Handwriting.

Defense and prosecution attorneys in the Lyddane case should be put under bond not to fight, in view of their recently expressed willingness to come to blows, Douglas M. Blandford, Mayor of Rockville, suggested to the Montgomery County Commissioners yesterday.

Mayor Blandford made the proposal as a private citizen, not as mayor, but said he took the step because the publicity in the case was giving Rockville "a bad name."

"Things have come to a pretty pass when the State Senator (Stedman Prescott, chief defense attorney) and the State's Attorney (James H. Pugh) talk of pitched battles on the courthouse lawn," Blandford declared. "When they begin issuing challenges, I feel they are not acting in accordance with their oaths to uphold the Constitution of the United States and the laws of Maryland. I have, therefore, suggested to the county commissioners that they be placed under peace bond."

Blandford made the suggestion to Frank H. Karn, president of the Board of Commissioners. He was to appear later before the entire board to repeat the proposal, but was unable to keep the engagement. The commissioners are deferring action until the matter is put before the board as a whole.

The feud between the lawyers first broke through the professional calm after the prosecution had refused to let the defense see certain papers in the case. Mr. Pugh forecast a fight and Mr. Prescott later said that he was willing to meet his opponent outside the courtroom.

More than 50 anonymous letters received by Mrs. Josephine Beale, of Darnestown, said to have been one of the intended victims in the alleged double murder plot, will be examined by handwriting experts, detectives investigating the case revealed yesterday.

The letters were received by the Darnestown woman through the past three years, officers asserted. They are now in the hands of Post-office officials here, and were turned over to postal investigators some time ago.

After a futile investigation, attempts to locate the person sending the letters were abandoned. As a result of the Lyydane case, they will be reopened, postal authorities announced.

Described by Mrs. Beale as merely "more annoying than any-

Capital Schools Today to Join National Strike Against War

George Washington Students Plan Demonstration; One Group to Strike Against Strike; Many Universities in Movement.

As speakers for today's antiwar student meetings gargled carefully in preparation for their bursts of oratory, it appeared there would be actual strikes in two schools, and student assemblies in four others here.

The local activity is one phase of a nation-wide strike. Leaders of the movement estimate that 150,000 students will take on extra recess to join the local strikers, the Associated Press reports. In Far Rockaway, New York, where the students couldn't wait for the national strike to begin their demonstration, a 19-year-old boy was arrested.

A strike-students leaving their classes without permission seems certain at George Washington University. An anti-strike strike has also been promised. Those who want to strike against war will leave their classes and assemble on the campus. Those students who want to strike against the strike will either attend classes, or, if they have none, leave the campus. Leaders of both strikers have been issuing communiques.

No Strike At Georgetown

Georgetown, Catholic and Maryland Universities will have no strikes, according to leaders student. However, the strikers plan to distribute leaflets at Georgetown.

President E. C. Higbie of the Wilson Teachers College has given permission for anti-war meeting at 11:45 a. m. in the assembly hall. The speaker will be Miss Elizabeth Wheeler, daughter of Senator Wheeler, of Montana, who will answer questions after the meeting. President Higbie said it is customary to allow the students to assemble at 11:45.

American University will have its demonstration at 11 a. m., almost the usual time for Friday assemblies. Dr. Wesley Gewehr, professor of history atAmerican University, and Miss Jeannette Rankin, secretary of the National Council for the Prevention of War and a former Representative in Congress, will be the speakers.

Two high schools have given permission for assemblies, under faculty supervision, and in another permission has been refused. The Board of Education recently refused ot issue a blanket order dismissing pupils to give them time to strike.

At the strike hour, delegates of six national organizations sponsoring the demonstration will call at

Britain Urges Powers Agree On Arms Quota

Held Best Plan for Peace; France Backs Hitler Reprisal Program.

By the Associated Press.

Paris, April 11.—It was authoritatively reported here tonight the British delegation at Strsa proposed the fixing of ratios for armaments between the principal powers, contending the establishment of such control was the best means of insuring European peace.

The French delegation, the same sources said, intends to demand that the conference decide upon economic action to be taken against Germany in case Adolf Hitler undertakes a new violation of international obligations.

The British delegation said Great Britain sincerely desires to see Germany back in Geneva, it was reported, but in view of Germany's demands she considers opening the door of the league to her at the present time is impossible.

Fear Readmission.

An unconditional readmission, the British were quoted as saying, would set a disastrous example.

Sanctions sought by France for application the next time Hitler violates a treaty would be drawn under a procedure similar to that provided in Article XVI of the League of Nations Covenant.

Great Britain, although still standing by the four-power Locarno pact which it signed with Italy, France and Germany, was represented as considering, nevertheless, the present solidarity of Paris, Rome and London and the League of Nations must form a basis of action in the present situation.

Britain and Italy, the informant said, promised active support of France's denunciation to the league

The Crisis Abroad.

The British delegation at Stresa was reported to have proposed the fixing of ratios for armaments as the best means of insuring peace.

In Berlin a government spokesman said Germany would participate in future parleys for disarmament only "on the basis of complete equality."

In Moscow, official confirmation was given to reports France and Russia had reached an agreement in principle on their proposed pact.

In Paris, official quarters said the Little Entente nations, as well as Turkey and Greece, looked favorably on the proposed Franco-Russian treaty.

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Stresa, April 11.—A clash of opinion between British and French delegations developed at today's inaugural sessions of the tri-power conference here, authoritative quarters said tonight, after France moved unexpectedly to get British and Italian support for her appeal to Geneva against German re-armament.

The French, it was learned, tossed into the midst of the afternoon session their memorandum of Adolf Hitler's alleged repudiations of treaties.

Pushed into the background by the French move were other broader issues of security, even though Prime Minister Ramsay MacDonald of Great Britain at the morning session had outlined his nation's desire for an inclusive system to safeguard the continent's peace.

The contents of the French memorandum, which supports the Paris appeal against Germany's violation of the Versailles treaty, will not be disclosed until it is introduced at the extraordinary session of the League of Nations council opening Monday.

Condemns Treaty Violation.

Officials here indicated it would be accompanied by the draft of a resolution condemning the treaty violation which France will seek to have the league council adopt.

The "Three Wise Men of the West"—MacDonald, Premier Benito Mussolini of Italy and Premier Pierre-Etienne Flandin of France—reached no decision during their 5½ hours in conference on the island as to the method of handling the French protest and the problem will be tackled again tomorrow.

England, eager as she is to get Germany back into the League of Nations, does not want to do so except under the proper conditions, was the gist of a statement made to he conference by Premier MacDonald.

"Burningly anxious as Great Britain is to get Germany back," MacDonald said, "it must not be conditions that will do more harm than good."

French and Italian representatives were reassured and gratified by his statement.

Flandin and his foreign minister, Pierre Laval, both addressed the conference to urge the necessity of clear-cut action in remonstrating against Germany's violation of the Versailles Treaty by her re-armament.

Reliable sources said MacDonald and the British foreign secretary, Sir John Simon, who during the morning session had been peppered with questions concerning his recent talks with Hitler, sought to soft pedal the complaint at Geneva.

They were described as eager to avoid angering Germany, thereby pushing her still further from par-

Dawn 'Blushes at Death,' Sighs Cuban Felled by Firing Squad

Copyright, 1935, by the Associated Press.

Santiago, Cuba, April 11.—Jose Gustavo Angulo Terry groomed himself properly today, walked out into the dawn and fell on a lonely rifle range with eight executioners' bullets in his head.

Angulo, the first terrorist to pay with his life under Cuba's emergency laws, died as the first rays of sun pierced the mists of Oriente Province mountains. As he saw his last dawning, the 26-year-old revolutionary said wistfully:

"The skies of Cuba blush to see an innocent man die."

As the impatient firing squad awaited the command of Lieut. Jose Gil to fire, Angulo tore the blindfold from his face.

Just before the order to fire was given a witness cried out to the doomed man, who stood erect, his hands chained behind him, and asked if he had a last statement to make.

Angulo replied: "Yayo Galvez is the real culprit." Eduardo Galvez, known as Yayo, is awaiting trial as an accomplice in the specific crime of placing a bomb in the home of a customs administrator at Puerto Padre.

The soldiers' shots rang out and Angulo fell. He was buried a few hours later.

Angulo spent a sleepless night except for a few minutes after 2 a. m. He talked glibly of his exploits as a revolutionary. At 6:05 a. m., when he was called for his death walk, he showed the first signs of emotional breakdown, but he soon regained his composure. Then he dressed himself meticulously before leaving his cell. He had clung to his religion in the final hours and received the last rites of the Roman Catholic Church.

7(a) Valueless Without Teeth, Biddle Insists

Backs Wagner Labor Bill as Substitute at Hearing on 'Hill.'

By the Associated Press.

Francis Biddle, who as chairman of the National Labor Board is charged with enforcement of the labor section of the recovery law, told Congress yesterday it would be "intellectual dishonesty" to extend that provision of the law without teeth to enforce it.

The aristocratic-born defender of labor's right to organize, advised the Senate Finance Committee to drop the much talked about section 7(a) from the recovery law and in its place enact the Wagner labor relations bill.

He told the committee the latter was "adequate and complete" and "is a part of the government's comprehensive scheme for national recovery."

Coming Conflict Emphasized

Biddle's testimony before a well attended hearing emphasized the coming conflict over section 7(a) and virtually assured that if the Wagner bill has not been enacted meanwhile, it will be offered as an amendment to the NRA bill when that reaches the floors of Congress.

The President yesterday reviewed the labor situation—in Congress and out—in a conference with Senator Wagner (Democrat), New York, author of the Wagner bill, and Senator Costigan (Democrat), Colorado.

They refused to comment on the parley. Organized labor's recent move for continuance of NRA, however, was accompanied by reports that the Wagner measure would have Administration support.

The Wagner bill would set up a permanent labor relations board, outlaw company-dominated unions and give the organization representing a majority of the workers the right to bargain on hours and wages with the employer.

NRA Test Almost Assured.

While the Finance Committee continued its NRA inquiry, a Supreme Court test of the recovery law's constitutionality was almost assured today when the Government filed a petition asking a review of the Second Circuit Court of Appeals' opinion in the Schechter poultry case. Almost all the recovery act was upheld by the court.

The Government joined with the Schechter Poultry Corporation in asking review of the points which the Government won, and appealed from the circuit court's findings against the Government.

This case has been selected by the Government as an ideal test of NRA's legality.

Solicitor General Stanley Reed asked the court to set the case for argument at this term of court, suggesting that it be heard during the week of May 6.

Announcement Due Monday.

If the poultry corporation waives its right to 20 days in which to answer the Government, as it has indicated it will do, the court is expected to announce Monday that it will review the appeal this term of court.

Reed said legislation to extend NRA was pending, and argued this made a final decision of constitutionality of great importance.

Biddle's testimony before the Finance Committee was sandwiched between arguments both for and against NRA in an all-day session of the Senate inquiry.

The afternoon session was a merry affair during protests against "petty persecution" made by Mrs. C. C. Wise, of Richmond, Va., a sister of former Senator Cohen (D.- Ga.), who is engaged in making children's wear:

Laughter interrupted her testimony frequently as she told of paying her janitor, "Henry," $14 a week "when he wasn't worth 14 cents." She was first told she must pay him $14, then later told she could pay him less because he was superannuated, she said, and then a protest was raised against the reduction.

Mrs. Wise said she paid her workers 30 cents an hour, the same as for similar work in shops, but was told she was violating the infants and children's code.

Critics of NRA included James M. Butler, counsel for Pharis Tire and Rubber Co., Newark, Ohio; A. H. Blackall, of Evanston, Ill., speaking for small oil companies; Anthony Soranno, Brooklyn, N. Y., speaking for the Amalgamated Retail Ice and Coal Dealers Association, and Jack N. Berkman, of Steubenville, Ohio, who charged monopoly in the scrap iron business.

Henry Ford, Wife Mark Wedding Day

Period of Poverty Recalled on 47th Anniversary.

By the Associated Press.

Detroit, April 11.—Mr. and Mrs. Henry Ford observed a wedding anniversary today, almost as quietly as the honeymoon days 47 years ago, when Mrs. Ford sat reading or sewing, while her husband tinkered with his first "horseless carriage."

For Mrs. Ford it also was a birthday. She married her inventor husband on her twenty-first birthday.

Ford spent a part of the day in his engineering laboratory at Dearborn and the remainder of its in a quiet observance of the anniversary with Mrs. Ford at home.

For the couple is was a recollection as well of the period in which they traveled from a small Michigan farm to prominence and fortune, and of the transition from the Bagley street home behind which, in an old carriage house, Ford tinkered of evenings while his bride sat and watched.

Between You and Me

Works Confusion Clings; AAA No Longer Model Experiment; Now It's Hoover-Smith Ticket.

By Raymond Clapper

ALTHOUGH the Administration drafted the works relief bill and finally put it through Congress substantially as written, giving the President almost dictatorial powers over the largest peace-time appropriation, officials still do not seem to know how far they can go. For instance, they are uncertain as to whether they can purchase land for subsistence homesteads and are about to ask Comptroller General McCarl for a ruling.

This is typical of the confusion still existing over the vast program. Two of the chief officials concerned with its administration, Secretary Ickes and Administrator Hopkins, emerged from a White House conference yesterday insisting, in reply to numerous questions, that they knew nothing. Some present thought they protested too much, but they stuck to it.

• • • •

As the high cost of living becomes increasingly acute among city consumers, blame centers more directly upon AAA management of the Nation's food supply.

Now it is wheat, the symbolic staff of life, which is causing trouble.

Last November AAA officials said that it would be desirable to raise 750,000,000 to 800,000,000 bushels this year. They eased restrictions slightly to a point which they predicted would yield about 790,000,000 bushels.

This estimate was challenged at the time by leading private grain experts. One said such a yield could come about only by a miraculous intervention of providence. The official method of basing crop allotments and predictions on rigid averages was condemned as unreliable and damaging and failing to take drought effects into consideration.

Sure enough, this week the Department of Agriculture estimated the total wheat crop would be 625,449,000 bushels instead of the nearly 800,000,000 anticipated last November.

A short time before, the Agriculture Department saw what was coming. AAA restrictions on spring wheat were lifted, but benefit payments were continued on condition that enlarged acreage be offset by extra curtailment next year.

Yesterday, to make the confusion worse confounded, AAA decided that full benefit payments would be made to farmers in drought areas who plant no wheat at all where conditions are so severe that seed would be wasted.

• • • •

All of this is discouraging because AAA once was regarded as a model experiment. It was one of the most advanced sectors on the economic planning front, with its own brain trusters. They had anticipated considerable difficulty with the human equation and were at great pains to use the right psychology. Much to their relief they found that, when accompanied by Government benefit checks, farmers were eager to embrace the new scheme of things.

What they hadn't counted upon was the weather. Slowly and painfully it is being discovered that not all of the best economic brains in the country can pace a delicate crop-control machine in step with the violent climatic fluctuations characteristic of America's wheat belt.

When he proposed the AAA plan to Congress, Mr. Roosevelt said that if the plan didn't work he would be the first to admit it. A number of others have beaten him to it. Meantime, Secretary Wallace is working toward his ever-normal granary plan. In dirt farmer language, this is just the plain common sense idea of keeping an extra supply in the bin as a protection against lean years. The idea is as old as Joseph and ancient Egypt. It is new only in the AAA program.

• • • •

When Herbert Hoover and Alfred E. Smith were asked in New York if they intended to throw their hats into the presidential ring again, both dodged.

Mr. Hoover fidgeted and said he would not answer "indiscreet questions." Mr. Smith asked if anyone wanted to rent space in his Empire State Building.

Such diplomatic evasions do not fool the wise ones here who can scent a political plot 85 stories up in the air. It may be denied but the insiders have everything figured out. For a time the Republicans were flirting with Huey Long. Ihe idea was for him to run as an independent, take half of Mr. Roosevelt's votes over and thereby put the Republicans back into the White House. But there wasn't enough in this for Huey so the idea has been dropped.

The new plan is a Hoover-Smith coalition ticket. Why else would these two have had their pictures taken together? Don't think it was merely because the photographers insisted on it. Mr. Hoover didn't appear very happy about posing with Mr. Smith but that was part of the plot. You can't afford to be too obvious.

Which one should head the ticket hasn't been decided. They may take turns.

Of course the Roosevelt propaganda machine is ready to howl down the plan by calling it a combination of the two worst defeated candidates in history. Naturally Democrats would say that. But look at the figures:

Total Hover-Smith rock-bottom vote—30,778,284, in a country that never has polled 40,000,000 votes. Pair them up and where does that leave Mr. Roosevelt? Just where the Republicans want him.

• • • •

Some objection is to be expected. Senator Hastings, chairman of the Republican senatorial campaign committee, says that "Mr. Hoover's candidacy might spoil our present good chances of winning next year."

Tut, tut, Senator.

• • • •

One minor tragedy of Mr. Hoover's trip East was precipitated by a reporter's error. Mr. Hoover, in a speech, put in a plug for his ARA—his American Relief Administration for European post-war refugees. He said ARA was the first great alphabetical agency. But a witless reporter, in quoting Mr. Hoover, wrote "NRA."

An official denial was necessary.

U. S. to Redeem $1,300,000,000 Liberty Bonds

Fourth Loan 4¼s Will Be Called This Week-End; Monday Big Day.

Notice is expected to be given over the coming week-end by the Treasury calling for redemption October 15 of the remaining outstanding 4¼ per cent Fourth Liberty Loan bonds totaling about $1,300,000,000, it was indicated yesterday.

This notice would be the next-to-last step by the Treasury in completely refunding the Fourth Liberty Loan bonds into lower interest bearing securities. This refunding operation so far has been more successful than expected when it was undertaken, due to the cheap money market now existing.

Secretary of the Treasury Henry Morgenthau said there would be no announcement regarding new financing until after Easter, April 21. This was taken to mean that in the last week of this month the Treasury would make a conversion offering for the $1,933,208,000 of First Liberties called for June 15.

To Pay From Balance.

The Treasury on Monday will complete the refunding of $1,875,000,000 of Fourth Liberties called last October as of April 15. Holders of $1,559,600,000 of these securities have indicated a desire to accept 2⅞ per cent Treasury bonds in exchange for them.

Thus, on Monday the Treasury must be ready to redeem $315,400,000 of these bonds. Without further borrowing the Treasury is ready to handle the transaction out of its working balance, even if all the bonds were presented for cash on that day, which is unlikely. Usually three or four months pass before all call bonds are presented for redemption.

No indications have been given of the interest rate which will be attached to the bonds offered in exchange for the First Libertys called for June 15. But all signs at this time point to an interest rate not in excess of the last offering of 2⅞ per cent bonds and probably less. The 2⅞ per cents are selling at a premium.

The condition of the money market is such that the State of Maryland yesterday was able to sell $5,500,000 of 3 per cent bonds at a premium of 7.699 points, thus placing those securities on a yield basis of 2.09 per cent. Never before has the State been able to borrow money so cheaply.

Cheap Money Available.

The Maryland sale was regarded as unusually cheap money, even though the bonds sold are retired annualy on a serial basis over a 15-year period. Treasury issues have longer maturities. Nevertheless, the belief prevails here that the Treasury can borrow money more cheaply than the State governments.

The outstanding first Libertys expected to be called over the week-end consist of $1,392,225,000 3½ per cent bonds; $5,002,400 4 per cent bonds and $535,981,000 at 4¼ per cent. The savings on this refunding operation will not be as great as that realized on the 4¼ per cent fourth Libertys, but it will be worth while. Moreover, the first Libertys carry a promise to pay in gold and the Administration is anxious to get that type of bond off the market as fast as possible.

If it should stop raining—it has been raining almost continuously for three weeks—there will be a golf tournament tomorrow afternoon. A formal reception for women, members and guests will be held in the late afternoon, with a formal dinner at night.

The Saturday program consists of the final round of the golf tournament—if it doesn't rain—a golfers' luncheon and the award of trophies and prizes.

Pink Slip Repeal Up to Roosevelt

Bill Awaits Signing to Become Law.

By the Associated Press.

President Roosevelt's signature was all that was needed last night to authorize Internal Revenue officials to tear up all those tax return publicity pink slips filed March 15.

Both House and Senate approved the conference report and sent to the White House the bill repealing the existing law.

The bill carries a provision inserted by Senator Costigan (Democrat), Colorado, authorizing State and local tax officials to inspect Federal returns to aid them in collecting personal property and other local taxes. This is not effective, however, until next year.

Cutting Overruled In Chavez Contest

Committee Strikes Charges on Election Costs.

By the Associated Press.

The Senate Elections Committee yesterday overruled the motion of Senator Cutting (Republican), New Mexico, for dismissal of the election contest brought against him by former New Mexico Representative E. Dennis Chavez.

At the same time the committee, on its own motion, ordered that allegations made by Chavez, a Democrat, in his petition in regard to unlawful expenditures of money by Cutting, members of his family or his agents be stricken out.

Action of the committee was intrepreted to indicate further contest proceedings will be based solely on allegation of illegal voting and the charge made by Chavez that election officials in San Miguel County were in conspiracy to elect Cutting and defeat Chavez.

Perkins Offers Rubber Chiefs 3 Peace Plans

Secretary Opposes Review of Election Order in Strike Negotiations.

By the United Press.

Rubber industry leaders and Labor Secretary Frances Perkins last night broke up a seven-hour conference on the threatened strike in Akron, with three plans under consideration for further discussion today. The three plans, Miss Perkins said, are:

Withdrawal by the companies of court action by which they have resisted the National Labor Relations Board orders for elections in the rubber plants.

Withdrawal of the court petitions for review of the Labor Board orders, and premitting elections, but continuing to hold the right of review, to be used later if desired.

Miss Perkins Neutral.

The American Federation of Labor unions have demanded recognition for collective bargaining, which the three companies have denied them.

Miss Perkins, who conducted negotiations with the rubber magnates single-handed, said she was neither optimistic nor pessimistic about the final possibility of averting the walkout of union workers.

"I am trying to keep a neutral frame of mind," she said.

She hinted at action overnight "which might lead to accomplishment tomorrow."

After another conference today with the manufacturers, Miss Perkins plans to meet with President William Green of the American Federation of Labor and Coleman Claherty, organizer of rubber workers' unions in Akron.

Miss Perkins said much thought was given to the question whether it is expedient to proceed immediately with court review of the election orders.

"My own opinion," she said, "is that while the companies are within their legal rights in asking for court decision, it is not expedient to push it at this time."

The industry representatives refused flatly to comment on the results of their conference.

At the conference were Cliff Slusser, of the Goodyear Tire & Rubber Co.; J. W. Thomas and B. M. Robinson, of Firestone, and J. D. Tew, S. M. Jett and T. G. Graham, of Goodrich.

Hupp Motor Car Strike Is Ended at Detroit

Detroit, April 11.—A strike which began last Friday at the Hupp Motor Car Co., ended today.

Francis J. Dillon, chief organizer for the American Federation of Labor, said that the more than 500 employes who had walked out would return to work Friday morning. Dillon, after a conference with strikers who had assembled to discuss the company's settlement plan, said the company had agreed to abolish the group bonus of wages and substitute a mutually agreeable wage system.

V. R. Drum, assistant to the chairman of the Hupp board, said: "I agreed that we would, within 30 days, work out a payment plan and methods to handle any disputes with employes. I agreed to seek a solution of the wage problem which would be satisfactory to the men and to meet with a committee of the men. We agreed to take back the five men who were laid off."

Smaller Powers Wait Stresa Word

Tension High OverEurope, With Hopes Split.

By the United Press.

Vienna, April 11.—Statesmen of Southeastern Europe tonight nervously awaited results of the "big three" conferences at Stresa on German rearmament.

Three nations disarmed by the peace treaties—Austria, Hungary and Bulgaria—hope that Britain, Italy and France will agree to cancellation of the military restriction clauses in their treaties. If not the three small powers plan to increase their armaments anyway. They fear publicly to denounce the peace treaties as Germany did, but it is clear if they are not given the right to equality in military affairs, in principle, they will obtain it by stealth.

Austria already has taken steps to increase her army and acquire armaments forbidden.

Nations of the little entente—Czechoslovakia, Yugoslavia and Rumania—on the other hand, hope Stresa will result in strong condemnation of Germany's one-sided action and reaffirm the status quo established after the World War. This attitude also is upheld by the Balkan entente—Rumania, Yugoslavia, Turkey and Grecee.

This group, like the little entente, was organized to combat the pro-German and revisionst program in the Balkans. It does not oppose limited rearmament for Austria, but bitterly opposes granting concessions to Hungary.

Mayors Confer Here on Works Project

Cities Seeking Right to Handle Work Program

on streets was stressed particularly in the meetings by Mayor Jackson.

By altering the basis on which loans and grants are now made to cities, the PWA would be able to pour out money much more rapidly, Ickes said. He added that a lowering of interest rates also has been proposed. In their talk with Mr. Roosevelt, however, the mayors are reported to have urged outright grants to cities, not involving loans.

Uncertainty Remains

The doubt and uncertainty surrounding the whole works program apparently has not been allayed by Mr. Roosevelt's return. Both Ickes and Hopkins, at separate press conferences, declared they did not know what parts they will play in the new set-up. In reply to a barrage of questions, they gave the same reply, "I don't know."

Asked if the purchase of submarginal land will be possible with the $4,000,000,000 works fund, Ickes declared, "I don't think that's clear." He added that he does not know whether subsistence homesteads can be continued with the new fund.

The same question about land purchase was asked Hopkins. He replied, "I can't answer that; I think so." In reply to further questioning, he said the FERA has acquired some land by condemnation, as authorized under an executive order of March 6, but he was unable to say whether this method will be continued.

Conflict Reported.

The reticence on the part of the New Deal's chief spenders was taken to indicate that Mr. Roosevelt is keeping his own counsel before announcing the central organization which will administer works relief. In one quarter the explanation for this delay was said to be conflicting plans of Hopkins and Rexford Guy Tugwell, Undersecretary of Agriculture, on the one hand, and Ickes on the other.

Hopkins asserted his belief that public works will come to be a permanent function of the Federal Government. In defense of the former CWA, which was widely criticized for graft and mismanagement, he issued a statement saying that of 751 charges of corruption serious enough to warrant investigation, 639 have been examined and only 240 have been substantiated.

"When you boil these things down to facts," he said, "the work of the thousands of people who handled CWA affairs stands out as a grand job of public service. It shows that public officials can perform as efficiently and as free from graft and corruption as any other group of humans."

FERA Acounting Asked.

Only 77 of the 240 cases of irregularities involved possible criminal violations, Hopkins said. These were turned over to United States attorneys with the result that convictions were obtained in 17 cases involving 22 persons. Asserting that "the figures contrast sharply with the rumors," Hopkins emphasized that 70,000 people helped administer the CWA and that a total of $939,000,000 was spent by this agency.

Meantime, the Senate Appropriations Committee approved the Couzens resolution asking an accounting of the $2,900,000,000 spent by the FERA. Hopkins declined to comment on the resolution beyond saying that the data would be submitted as soon as requested.

For the second consecutive month, the FERA reported a drop in the number of urban families on relief. The number declined from 2,212,789 in February to 2,202,981 in March, but expenditures increased slightly to $70,966,152.

The PWA, meantime, announced that plans for the proposed $12,500,000 West Side slum clearance and low-cost housing project in Chicago have been abandoned because of speculation in real estate. Administrator Ickes laid the blame on "chiseling" lawyers, who, he said, attempted to raise prices for land far in excess of fair values.

mentarian, was besieged with more than 50 requests for a ruling on whether various bills dealing with old-age amendments and unemployment insurance would be germane as amendments to the Administration measure. He declined to give an opinion until he could study the proposals.

Opponents of the O'Connor rule were snowed under, 188 to 54, when they sought to amend the resolution and declare the Townsend and Lundeen plans in order.

The fight over adoption of the rule was marked by a sharp exchange between O'Connor and Representative Monaghan (Democrat), Montana.

Monaghan—termed "the young admiral from Montana" by O'Connor—objected that his "constitutional rights" had been violated because he had not been permitted to speak in opposition to the rule.

"The gentleman is making a demagogic speech to his constituents on the Townsend plan," O'Connor said.

Later O'Connor withdrew his remark.

"In order to save the time of the House—and without indicating that I have changed by personal opinion—I withdraw the remark," he explained.

Representative Marcantonio (Republican), New York, former campaign manager of Mayor LaGuardia, of New York, helped Monaghan oppose the rule.

"You call this a New Deal," he shouted, "and you bring in a rule that won't let us vote on either the Townsend plan or the Lundeen bill. This is no New Deal. The cards are being dealt from the same old pack that was sent to the laundry two years ago. Call it a New Deal if you want to. I call it a new delusion."

Representative Lundeen (Farmer-Laborite), Minnesota, indicated he would speak later in behalf of his bill, which would have the Federal Government pay the prevailing wage scale to the unemployed.

The 20 hours' debate called for in the rule will be spread over at least a week. An additional week or two will be required for consideration of countless amendments.

Chairman Doughton, of the Ways and Means Committee, the first speaker in behalf of the measure, defended the program as "a humanitarian bill."

Rare Titian Is Donated To Detroit Art Gallery

Detroit, April 11 (AP).—A valuable but little known painting by Titian has been acquired by the Detroit Institute of Arts from an anonymous donor, it was disclosed today.

Art experts estimated the work was worth at least $100,000.

The Titian obtained by the institute here was reported to have been kept for many years in England, and has been exhibited only once. The painting depicts the biblical episode of Judith's slaying of Holofernes.

Mrs. Roosevelt Hears Mountain Fete Plans

By the Associated Press.

The annual folk music festival on White Top Mountain, Va., was the subject of conversation at luncheon yesterday at the White House.

Judge Blakemore headed the little group of Whitetoppers who came to Washington to tell Mrs. Roosevelt about their plans. The latter long has taken a special interest in the festival, because it is held in a neighborhood where her father, the late Elliott Roosevelt, lived for many months prior to his death.

She attended it two years ago; later presented some of the folk musicians in the first concert ever broadcast from the east room of the White House. She said today she did not believe it would be possible for her to attend again this year.

Quotas Urged For Japanese Cotton Goods

or multiangular trade would best serve the two countries' interests.

The Japanese envoy had in mind—and undoubtedly pointed this out to the State Department as did some of his countrymen the day previously to the unofficial Forbes trade mission now in Japan—that a good example of triangular trade was between his country, the United States and Latin America. This country buys more from Latin America, Brazil for instance, than it sells there. Japan buys more from this country than it sells here. The Latin-American countries buy more from Japan than they sell there.

But even as Mr. Saito spoke of continued friendly relations betwen his own and this country, his foreign office handed to the American embassy in Tokyo a reply to the American Government's protest against the oil monopoly in Manchukuo, which became effective Wednesday. This Government protested that the monopoly created by Japan's sponsored government in Manchukuo shut out American oil interests and violated the "open-door" agrement of the Far East.

Non-Recognition Is Excuse.

According to the Associated Press, the Japanese rejected the American viewpoint, contending that since this country had not seen fit to grant recognition to Manchukuo it could not claim the benefit of the "open-door" policy in the Japanese-sponsored empire.

As these conversations were taking place, spokesmen for cotton textile interests were pressing for closing the "open door" of American trade in Japanese textile manufacture, unless the Roosevelt Administration would take steps to place this country's industry on a competitive basis with that of the Nipponese.

According to figures compiled by the Cotton Textile Institute and being widely circulated by the New England industry, Japan in January and February of this year sent to this country 9,085,000 square yards of cotton cloth, almost 2,000,000 square yards more than Japan sent here in all of last year, and about eight times as much as in all of 1933.

AAA and NRA Blamed.

The reason for this remarkable increase in cotton cloth exports from Japan, domestic manufacturers contend, is that the Nipponese can undersell the American industry because of processing taxes and added costs made necessary by NRA wage and work regulations.

The New England group regards itself as at a particular competitive disadvantage since the Southern mills under NRA enjoy a wage differential. Members of House and Senate from States with cotton textile mills have been deluged with letters making these complaints.

President Roosevelt's refusal to repeal the cotton processing tax and pay cotton acreage reduction benefits out of the $4,880,000,000 works relief fund apparently has infuriated spokesmen for the textile interests. Lincoln Daylies, of the Northern Mills Policy Committee, last night threatened that valdity of the processing tax will be fought in the courts unless the President grants some relief. Moreover, he predicted, many textile mills would close down, adding thousands of workers to relief rolls.

Quota Movement Grows.

In view of the President's attitude toward repealing the processing tax, the drive to get him to place cotton cloth imports from Japan on a quota basis gained renewed impetus. Several State Legislatures have adopted resolutions urging action and Senator David J. Walsh (Democrat), of Massachusetts is expected to ask such a step when he heads a delegation of New England Governors today to President Roosevelt.

The President has authority under both the NRA and AAA acts to embargo or limit importation articles creating unfair competition for American products because of requirements of these two acts. This right has been reserved by the United States in all reciprocal trade agreements negotiated so far.

Secret Parley Maps Sea Drill Of U. S. Fleet

154 Craft to Participate in Gigantic Maneuvers During May.

By the Associated Press.

Aboard U. S. S. Pennsylvania, San Pedro, Calif., April 11.—Nineteen men, ranking officers of the United States fleet, conferred today in the after suite of this dreadnaught flagship on plans for gigantic maneuvers next month in the North Pacific.

They were piped over the side with ceremony.

Marine orderlies, immobile, stood in the white steel corridors, guarding the doors of the conference chamber, for the discussion of these admirals was confidential.

The conference was called by Admiral J. M. Reeves, commander in chief, United States fleet, and all of the unit and force commanders here and at San Diego attended.

Vieled in Secrecy.

"Problem XVI" was the chief subject of the conference. That's why it was confidential. Never before have the annual fleet maneuvers been veiled with the degree of secrecy that Admiral Reeves had thrown around the plans for this six weeks in the North Pacific, starting early in May.

Planes will play a large part in the naval exercises, with some 463 naval aircraft participating, compared with 320 in the annual maneuvers last year.

They are expected to prove even in actual naval exercises that the Hawaiian Islands, Alaska and the Pacific Coast are only hours apart instead of days.

Submarines Included.

New world-cruising submarines, new heavy scout cruisers, new airplanes, a new type destroyer, a new aircraft carrier, and a newly modernized battleship are among the types participating in American naval maneuvers for the first time.

In the beginning of the maneuvers there will be 151 ships, and at least three more will join before the final phases. These include 12 dreadnaughts, eight light cruisers, four aircraft carriers, 25 submarines, 12 heavy cruisers, 55 destroyers and five mine craft, making 121 fighting ships and 33 auxiliaries from the base train and supply forces.

Nathan Frank Will Upheld by Court

Nephew Loses Suit Claiming Share in $4,00,000.

By the Associated Press.

St. Louis, April 11.—The will of Nathan Frank, millionaire lawyer and former Representative, was sustained late today by Circuit Judge Robert Kirkwood, who gave a jury premeptory instructions for a verdict against Mark Frank, of New York, a nephew who contested the will.

Mark Frank had based his suit to share in the one-time $4,000,000 estate of the St. Louis lawyer on a contention his uncle was of unsound mind when the will was drawn. Judge Kirkwood closed the contest by holding that Mark Frank had failed to prove that allegation, or other charges of undue influence and hallucinations.

Frank's will, as upheld by the court, left the bulk of his estate to a nephew, Alfred Frank, of Oakland, Calif., and to two nieces, Mrs. Brannette Krupp, of El Paso, Tex., and Mrs. Grace Greenhall, St. Louis. Mark Frank was excluded.

Aero Progress Up to Oil Men, Woodring Says

Declares Improved Fuel Will Keep U. S. Abreast of Other Nations.

By the Associated Press.

Amarillo, Tex., April 11.—The petroleum industry was called upon today by Harry H. Woodring, Assistant Secretary of War, for renewed efforts to keep American military aviation abreast of developments in other nations.

Addressing the midcontinent division of the American Petroleum Institute, Woodring credited the outstanding achievements in aviation in the last few years to "cooperative advances made by the Air Corps and the petroleum industry in the production of improved fuels and oils."

"It can be shown that, in the United States, aviation motors were increased in power at one time by 33 1-3 per cent, due to fuel and oil development alone," he said. "It undoubtedly is the most economical way to obtain appreciable increased airplane performance, but we can not be content with past accomplishments.

"With the knowledge that Japan, Manchukuo, Russia, England, Germany, Italy and many other countries are now building modern plants to obtain the maximum in high output of fuels; with the knowledge gleaned from the foreign press showing a marked appreciation of the importance of improved fuels and their necessity to those nations; may I impress upon you as representatives of the petroleum industry that every diligence must be exercised by yourselves and the War Department to attain immediate and continued perfections in the production of aviation fuels and oils."

The former Kansas Governor said that in time of war "industrial activities must continue to operate under the management of their own trained personnel."

"To relieve these men of the direct responsibility for the operation of their plants in war," he added, "would paralyze production and would, therefore, be a blunder of the most serious kind."

Dust's Wheat Toll in Texas Placed At $18,000,000; Storm Continues

Derailed Trains, Blocked Traffic, One Death Left in Wake.

estimate of those involved in the exodus was 8 per cent.

In Hamilton County, at the western edge of Kansas, Harry Laubach, a farmer, said a few families had left, but that they were not "established farmers with money invested in their lands."

Lamar, Colo., schools and many places of business remained closed as dust swirled there for the seventh consecutive day.

Dust-covered trains, which passed through the affected area Wednesday, reached Chicago yesterday two to six hours late. There conductors told of midday "midnight" in Kansas.

Business and social life around at a standstill. Schools remained Dodge City, Kans., were virtually closed. Five westbound Santa Fe trains were held up, their passengers virtually marooned.

Dust clouds darkened most of the big State of Texas.

Graphic illustrations of crop damage came from southwestern Kansas.

"I thought last year was as bad as it could possibly be," said Mrs. Ida Watkins, one of the State's big wheat farmers.

"But I did get $56.25 out of a total planting of 2,800 acres last year, and I can not possibly get a red cent out of the same acreage this year."

Heavy Loss Claimed.

H. L. Hartshorn, of Syracuse, Kans., another big producer, said he had visited all parts of southwestern Kansas, finding only little stretches of wheat near Ulysses, Meade and Fowler.

"But the dust has blown over those fields since I saw them," he said.

In northwestern Kansas, however, a Kansas "wheat king" told a different story.

"Oh, we have had dust," said Albert Weaver, of Bird City (Cheyenne County), who, with his tenants, has 4,000 acres.

"But it hasn't hurt. We got 91,000 bushels last year and we ought to get around 85,000 this year. The difference is due to the cold January weather—not the dust."

Outside the vast area—100,000 square miles or more—where the soil blowing is concentrated, the dust has caused only inconvenience.

Snow in Colorado extended even into the dust-blown area, drifting five feet deep between Salida and Limon. Snow plows were put into use. At Pritchett, Colo., 180 children who were imprisoned for two nights in a schoolhouse by the spinning dust were able to go home.

Optimism Voiced

Oklahomans quickly pointed out that in contrast with the stricken northwestern Panhandle, the rest of the State was in fine shape, with rainfall 31 per cent above normal. Farmers of eastern Kansas also chimed in with optimistic views to counter the gloom in the West and officials pointed out western Kansas wheat farmers would receive about $15,000,000 this year in crop curtailment payments.

Rain was general over Iowa, which escaped crop damage from blowing. Rain also fell in southeastern Nebraska and over Wisconsin, Western Nebraska had snow.

South Dakota reported spotted dust disturbances, none serious. Rainfall there remained normal.

Gov. Alf M. Landon of Kansas urged in a telegram to Secretary Wallace that formulation of plans to prevent soil erosion "be directed by the Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the State agricultural colleges of the several States concerned."

New Dust Storm Kills Woman, Heads South

By the United Press.

Kansas City, Mo., April 11.—A new dust storm streamed southward today off the blowing fields of western Kansas and Oklahoma. A thinning haze over the old South marked the progress of yesterday's storm.

Stiff north winds shifted the flight of the grimy pall toward the Gulf of Mexico and into areas which heretofore have escaped. A woman died in Drumright, Okla., from its effects.

The steady sweep of dirt filled the railway tracks on half a dozen lines and drifting sand brought a dozen trains to a halt between Dodge City, Kans., and Amarillo, Tex. Train crews sought to shovel away the dirt but were forced to stop.

The new storm enveloped the entire State of Texas and most of western Oklahoma. El Paso, Tex., more than half-way up the Rio Grande, reported visibility down to a few feet. Half-way across the State at San Antonio, 500 miles distant, dust was settling in a thick coating on streets and buildings. Another 400 miles east at Longview, a light rain failed to clear away the dust.

Physicians blamed the dust for the death of Mrs. Margaret Sims, 80, of Drumright, Okla.

The elderly woman suffered from asthma. With the advent of the dust her condition rapidly became worse and after five hours of breathing the choking air, she died.

Several deaths of aged persons in western Kansas were believed to have been hastened by similar conditions. The danger of children becoming lost has forced the closing of schools.

Wheat Curb Bonus to Be Paid In Spite of Dust-Ruined Fields

Control Contracts Requiring Certain Planting Not Binding Where Planting Is Impossible, AAA Rules; Storm Moves Eastward.

Federal cash will go out to the farmers of the wheat belt even if dust and drought makes it impossible for them to plant their crop this year.

This announcement came yesterday from the Agricultural Administration. Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace said the farmers in the dust-stricken area who had signed contracts to reduce their wheat would receive their payments even though flying dust clouds and gloomy weather forecasts indicate that they may not be able to plant the minimum acreage required to prove that they are legitimate "wheat farmers."

Present contracts specify that the farmers must plant a minimum of 54 per cent of their base acreage. Reports yesterday indicated that planting in certain sections of Oklahoma was almost hopeless, that the Kansas yield would be but 47 per cent of normal, and that damage to early-planted wheat in Texas would cost the farmers at least $18,000,000.

The Agricultural Adjustment Administration thereupon announced:

"Secretary Wallace has approved the making of 1935 adjustment payments to those wheat producers for whom this year's minimum planting requirements has been waived because of extreme drought conditions.

"The payment will make available again this year, as last year, a partial crop-income insurance for those farmers in such drought areas."

To obtain the payment, the individual farmers must apply to their county wheat control committees. They must show that the soil has been prepared for planting and that it is evident now that planting seed would be "a waste." Waivers will be permitted only in counties officially designated by the AAA's wheat section.

Simultaneously, the AAA announced its intention of going ahead with wheat-control plans for the next four years, provided wheat growers agree in a special referendum to be held May 25. The present wheat-adjustment contracts expire at the close of this crop year.

$19,000,000 Expended On Dust-Proof Trains

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 11.—Western railroads are spending $19,000,000 to seal their trains against dust storms and summer heat.

Harry G. Taylor, chairman of the Western Association of Railway Executives, announced today that through this expenditure trains carrying more than 75 per cent of the Western lines' passengers will have been air conditioned by May 15.

Efficacy of the new system had been conclusively demonstrated, he added, when recent travelers on air-conditioned cars came unsullied through clouds of silt rolling over the Great Plains.

Kansas dispatches told how passengers on air-conditioned cars were the envy of grime-plagued residents of that region.

At the same time several thousand workmen were reconditioning diners, coaches, sleepers and observation cars. Several thousand others will be employed to man air-conditioning stations at junction terminals—mechanics, electricians and attendants, who will recharge batteries, adjust devices and store ice.

Taylor estimated the Nation's railroads were spending about $50,000,000 for air-conditioning—but with an early return in sight. He anticipated a successful summer season. He figured foreign exchange rates and European unrest would influence many persons to "see America first" and to see it from the windows of air-conditioned coaches.

"The summer resort climate," he remarked, "will start when you step into the train."

Dust Brings 'Night' In Day to Dixie Areas

By the Associated Press.

Memphis, Tenn., April 11.—A dust storm enveloped the South and Southwest today.

Borne by a stiff wind out of Texas, the worst dust storm the agricultural South has known in years settled over north Louisiana, Arkansas, Mississippi and Tennessee.

Residents of Memphis, Little Rock, Jackson and other cities awakened in darkness. All over the affected area motorists traveled with their automobile lights burning.

The dust was choking at times As the day wore on, however, conditions improved. All trace of the visitation probably will have vanished by tomorrow, meteorologists said.

Because of the poor visibility, plane schedules were suspended here and at Shreveport, where the storm was fairly heavy.

Surgeons at leading hospitals postponed major operations because of the seepage of dust into operating rooms, making sterilization of instruments and wounds difficult.

Jay Moffatt Given Post in Australia

President Roosevelt yesterday sent to the Senate the nomination of Jay Pierrepont Moffat, chief of the western European division of the State Department, to be a consul general. Later it was revealed that he wil be assigned as consul general at Sydney, Australia.

16-1 Silver Bill Reported Out; Markets Climb

Wheeler Expansion Plan Wins Senate Support; Vote to Be Pushed.

can silver mining interests "deserved" the bounty. Increasing prosperity in these mining districts as a result of the action was generally forecast yesterday.

Gratified at the President's move, but insisting it does not go far enough, Senator Wheeler last night was hopeful of getting a Senate vote on the 16-to-1 bill reported yesterday by the Agriculture Committee, pointing out that the measure came within two votes of passage when offered last session. Administration leaders, however, discount its chances.

The Wheeler measure contemplates an ultimate price of $2.18 for silver, instead of the $1.29 goal set forth in the last silver act. Treasury certificates would be issued against these stocks "in an amount which in the aggregate shall equal the cost of such silver to the Treasury.

Denies China Suffers.

Based on the new domestic silver price and the $35 an ounce statutory value of gold, the ratio of silver to gold is now 49 to 1. If and when the $1.29 level is reached, the ratio will be 28 to 1.

Senator Pittman told the Senate yesterday that the Treasury already has purchased, from all sources, 389,000,000 ounces of silver, with a $200,000,000 profit available. The Nevadan denied that China or this country's trade with China has suffered as a result. Talk of China going on a gold standard he labeled "pure rot."

Pittman lauded the President for his action.

"It conclusively proves the President intends to carry out the London pact and silver act fully and completely, and in the spirit in which those steps were taken."

Senator McCarran will reply today to Secretary Morgenthau's letter opposing the McCarran bill for repeal of silver nationalization, regulation and the silver profits tax. McCarran charged the Treasury is sanctioning "wash sales" of silver abroad.

Warns of Change.

"* * * While we are improving the monetary uses of silver and gold and increasing our stocks of silver, the reserve executive power in section 8 of the silver purchase act, section 3 of the gold reserve act and section 2 of the emergency banking act, should not be disturbed," Morgenthau wrote McCarran.

"To do so would paralyze action which the Government may have to take in order to protect our monetary system from possible crises in the international exchange markets and from speculative dealings in the monetary metals and other foreign exchanges."

Mr. Morgenthau opposed repeal of silver nationalization provisions, holding "the authority should remain again to call in silver in the event that a tendency should arise to withhold that metal for nonindustrial purposes." The alternative, he suggests, would be to subject silver to regulation equally stringent with gold.

Morgenthau assured McCarran there is "nothing in" his assumption that the United States can not buy silver through domestic brokers because of the silver tax.

He said McCarran's suggested repeal of three sections of the silver act "would jeopardize the true purpose of the legislation of which they form a part."

After July 4 NRA Limits Firecrackers

The Blue Eagle yesterday decided to curb the screaming of its rival, the bald-headed eagle.

NRA announced that manufacturers of fireworks under a code amendment just approved, will be required to limit the size of "salutes" and "firecrackers" to four inches in length and five-eighths of an inch in diameter. The action was taken in the interest of greater public safety. The quantity of explosives in each piece of fireworks also will be limited by the amendment.

However, no immediate protest from the small boy element is seen as the amendment, it was announced does not become effective until July 6.

County Court Seeks Health Aid's Ouster

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Martinsburg, W. Va., April 11.—An effort by the Berkeley County Court to remove Dr. Claude A. Thomas as director of the county health unit failed when its request to the State health council to disqualify him was returned without action by Dr. Arthur E. McClue, State health commissioner, with the suggestion that if the county court removes Dr. Thomas the State health department will be "glad to assist in selecting trained personnel to succeed the present health officer."

The county court filed with the State health department charges stating the appointment of Dr. Thomas by the preceding county court had been illegal and asking his removal. Dr. McClue's reply said the State council took no action "since it was not in the form of an order."

Russia Admits A French Pact Nears Signing

Terms Will Await Outcome of Peace Conference at Stresa.

By the Associated Press.

Moscow, April 11.—Official confirmation was given tonight to reports France and Soviet Russia have reached an agreement in principle for a mutual security convention.

While French, Italian and British diplomats discussed the strained European situation at Stresa, the official Tass News Agency in a terse announcement said the accord had been reached on the basis of a general European security agreement, but gave no details.

It said the Franco-Soviet agreement "will be concluded in the nearest future" but fixed no date. Previous reports from Paris were that it would be signed when Pierre Laval, French foreign minister, comes to Moscow for conferences beginning April 25.

Paris reports further stated Maxim Litvinoff, Soviet commissar for foreign affairs, who is now en route to Geneva for the meeting of the League of Nations' council, would discuss details there with Laval.

The statement issued by Tass follows:

"In accordance with information received from reliable sources Tass confirmed reports from Paris that on the basis of a general European agreement for security, an agreement has been reached in principle between the governments of the U. S. S. R. and France on a project for a Franco-Soviet convention of security which will be concluded in the very near future."

Many observers believe terms of the agreement will depend upon the result of the meetings at Stresa and Geneva.

Parliament Wants New Talk at Berlin

Lobbies Oppose Radical New Security Moves.

By the Associated Press.

London, April 11.—British political circles felt tonight any decisions at Stresa regarding new peace enforcement moves should not be final until London has a chance for further exploration of Germany's views and aims.

Lobbies of Parliament buzzed with private discussions of the situation and members eagerly read press reports from Stresa. General opinion was that a new sounding out of Berlin was necessary as soon as possible after close of the conference.

The government seemed to be trying to eliminate apprehension in some political quarters over British policy. Parliament has not been given any definite information on what proposals Ramsay MacDonald and Sir John Simon are making and members have been doing considerable private conjecturing.

General opinion in the lobbies seemed to be against any radical new security moves involving this country, but many appeared agreed that a strengthening of existing pacts would not meet much opposition from Parliament.

An authoritative source said France would be asked at Stresa to explain fully aims of the new Franco-Russian security pact, which has been agreed upon in principle.

Nazi Court Tries Ohio Teacher Toda

Light PunishmentExpected if Charge Is Proved.

By the Associated Press.

Berlin, April 11.—Richard Roiderer, Cleveland (Ohio) man, was said to be "well and in comparatively good spirits" tonight, on the eve of his hearing before the dread people's court for allegedly betraying Germany's military secrets.

The trial begins at 9 a. m. tomorrow before five judges sitting in the great hall of the Prussenhaus, formerly the Prussian Parliament. The first session will be public, but later sittings, it is expected, will be secret.

Reliable quarters predicted tonight that Roiderer's trial would be brief and that his sentence, if he is found guilty, will be light.

The American's counsel perfected his case tonight but gave no indication of its nature. There will be no lastminute attempt to have the charges quashed or change court procedure, it was said.

A teacher of English at Munich before his arrest, Roiderer will be the first American to face trial before the people's court.

As far as has been learned, charges against him are based on jottings in his notebook, which were discovered when he tried to cross the border into Switzerland.

Husband Who 'Lived Too Long' Slain by Mallet, Police Are Told

Widow and 'Handy Man' Held; Both Deny and Admit Murder.

By the Associated Press.

Bournemouth, England, April 11. A "mallet murder" today was added to the list of recent English crime sensations that already includes two unsolved "trunk murders" and one "torso murder."

At preliminary police court hearing today Mrs. Alma Victoria Rattenbury, 31, song writer, and George P. Stoner, her 19-year-old chauffeur and handyman, were officially charged with murdering the woman's husband, Francis M. Rattenbury, retired architect and former resident of Vancouver, British Columbia, last month.

Statements from police read by the public prosecutor said both admitted swinging a heavy mallet upon the elderly man's head.

A surgeon who went with police to the Rattenbury's Villa Madeira testified that the architect's fatal injuries were inflicted by three distinct blows with some blunt instrument, probably delivered from behind.

The prosecutor said Mrs. Rattenbury, when police interviewed her, was dressed in pajamas and appeared to have been drinking.

Eventually, he continued, she told the police, "I know who has done it."

Police cautioned her against saying anything that would incriminate her. Then, the court was told, she said:

"I did it with the mallet which is hidden: 'Rats' (that was her nickname for her husband) has lived too long."

A moment later, according to the prosecutor, she told police:

"No, my lover did it. I will give you ten pounds. No, I won't bribe you."

Later still she was quoted as saying:

"I will tell you in the morning where the mallet is. Have you told the coroner yet? I shall make a better job of it next time. Irene (her maid) does not know. I made a proper muddle of it."

Still another statement attributed to her was:

"I was playing cards with my husband when he dared me to kill him as he wanted to die. I picked up the mallet. He said 'you haven't got guts enough to do it.' Then I hit him with the mallet."

A statement police said was signed by Stoner, who was arrested March 28, said Mrs. Rattenbury shouted to him to "come down and help Rats into bed.

Chauffeur Also Confesses.

"I cleaned the blood from the floor on her instructions. I have never seen a mallet on the premises. Mr. and Mrs. Rattenbury have been on the best of terms. She was sober."

Stoner was quoted as saying verbally, however:

"I did the job. I believed he was asleep."

On March 29, after his arrest, he declared Mrs. Rattenbury had nothing to do with the affair, the prosecutor said.

"When I did the job I believed he was asleep," the statement attributed to Stoner continued.

"I hit him, then I told Mrs. Rattenbury. I watched through the French window and saw her kiss him goodnight, and then leave the room. I waited and crept in through the unlocked window. Still, it ain't much use saying anything. When they tell her I am arrested she will go out of her mind."

France Tells Citizens To Buy Gas Masks

By the United Press.

Paris, April 11.—France, feverishly preparing for war, tonight urged her people to purchase gas masks without delay.

A communique issued by the passive Defense Commission of the Seine Department advised citizens not to wait until the masks are needed.

The war ministry simultaneously announced that the Eightieth Infantv Regiment was transferred from southern France to Metz, near the Saar territory, recently returned to Germany. The communique added that the recent decree retaining the present conscript class indefinitely, although it was due for demobilization this month, was issued so these men could be available "for work in organizing the eastern frontier, arranging camps and give new troops instructions" on their duties.

the White House to present resolutions condemning war.

Representative Maverick, of Texas, is scheduled to speak on the George Washington campus to the strikers at the morning session. Another strike will be held in the evening for the night school students, at 6 o'clock. Representative Sisson, of New York, is scheduled to speak at this meeting. After the evening rally the students will gather at 1819 G street to discuss the formation of anti-war councils in local schools.

Meanwhile, two students who have opposed the strike declared additional opposition to organizations which may try to prevent it. The students are John Coggins and William G. Gausman, of George Washington. Both have worked and spoken against the strike. But when they heard that the American Legion had declared it should be stopped "by any means necessary," they decided the strike was the lesser of the two evils. They opposed the strike because its aims were muddy and involved, but they oppose the legion because it advocates a suppression of "academic freedom."

Colleges to Strike.

National strike headquarters said it expected 50,000 students to walk out in New York City alone, although high school students have been forbidden to leave their classes. All universities in the city are planning strikes except St. John's and Fordham.

College authorities at the University of Virginia, the University of Pennsylvania and Colgate have authorized the suspension of classes for the period of the strike. Police permission has been obtained for an anti-war parade in New York tonight from Columbus Circle to Madison Square.

DePauw University held its anti-war demonstration on April 2, and will not participate in today's activities. Dennison University at Granville, Ohio, will have special chapel services. It was reported that Smith and Vassar are ready for complete walk-outs. Mass meetings are planned at Antioch College, University of Toledo, Miami University and Bowling Green College.

The strike was explained yesterday over the radio by Joseph P. Lash, of the strike committee and Albert W. Hamilton, who was expelled from the University of California for refusing to take military courses.

"Our strike is a dress rehearsal for what we intend to do the day your Congress declares war," Lash said. "We say send Congress to Shanghai. Send the war-makers there. We're not going."

Hamtilton stressed the catholic nature of the strike, saying that students of all countries, of all creeds, are untiting in the protest against armed conflict. He listed as those who have approved the strike Bishop Francis J. McDonnell, of the Methodist Church; the World Peace Commission and Senators Nye, Pope and Clark.

Permission for the strike at the University of Ohio was withdrawn by the president after two pacifist groups fought over the sponsorship of the movement. Finding that the anti-war body was not homogeneous, he declared that the meeting was not "a general student project."

council of Germany's violation of military clauses of the Versailles Treaty but without going so far as to sign France's memorandum.

A chain of Eastern pacts which would bring the Little Entente, Turkey and Greece into "automatic cooperation" in case of aggression may be modeled on the Franco-Russian accord.

Official quarters said those powers' ministers to France, whom Foreign Minister Pierre Laval entertained at luncheon before his departure for Stresa, approved the principle of the Franco-Russian agreement.

They were said to agree with the view expressed here that any collective security system such as the Stresa conference is expected to consider would be too vague for effectiveness and to regard regional pacts as the best hope for buttressing European security.

This belief was strengthened, it was said, by Germany's and Poland's refusal to enter the "Eastern Locarno" security pact sponsored by France.

Doubt Reich Overtures.

Official circles professed ignorance of reports current here that Reichsfuehrer Adolf Hitler is seeking "face-to-face" talks with Laval to clarify the two nations' joint problems.

The war ministry announced that 60,000 conscripts held three months extra would be used largely in reorganizing Eastern frontier fortifications.

The reports that Hitler was trying to get Laval to stop off at Berlin on his way back from Moscow and Warsaw drew the comment in the Nationalist Journal Des Debats: "Information trips are no longer in season—collective action is necessary now."

It was stated authoritatively that the Little Entente—Rumania, Czechoslovakia and Yugoslavia—has always been in complete sympathy with efforts to bring France and Russia closer together.

Germans Say Pacts Must Give Equality

are still ready to consider the Eastern situation if no mutual assistance provisions are insisted upon which might draw us into a war that is none of our business.

"Further, we are ready to accept as a part of a security scheme consultation in case of danger, arbitration of any differences and nonsupport for an aggressor.

"In the West, Germany is ready to execute her part in the Locarno Treaty and sign an air pact as was proposed in the London communique of February 3."

ticipation in a collective security pact.

Admits Differences.

A high British spokesman tonight, while stressing optimism concerning today's proceedings, admitted "there might be some differences of opinion." He added, however: "But there is no difference in principle or aim."

French spokesmen were plainly pessimistic but sought to minimize it by voicing the conviction that complete agreement would be reached.

"You must not expect too much the first day," an official spokesman said.

Premier Flandin told French newspapermen: "All three governments have resolved to stand together and we are certain to reach complete understanding."

A similar sentiment was voiced by MacDonald at the very outset of the conference when he declared everything would be done to demonstrate the solidarity of Britain, France and Italy.

No country may assume, the prime minister said, that the three will be divided, adding that the visits Simon and Capt. Anthony Eden, lord privy seal, made to Berlin were not with the idea of making Germany think there were no objections to her rearmament.

Text Kept Secret.

While the nature of the resolution expected to accompany the French memorandum at Geneva was kept secret, some competent quarters said it was likely to contain refusal to recognzie unilateral repudiation of treaties, thus following the lines of the London and Rome communiques already issued by France and Italy and France and Great Britain.

Officials said the question of penalizing Germany for violation of the Versailles Treaty would not be raised either in the memorandum or the resolution.

The French scouted any suggestion that Hitler might be invited to Stresa or some subsequent conference. Officials likewise said they were not aware of any suggestion that Laval visit Berlin for "face-to-face talks" with Hitler en route back from Moscow.

"I would be greatly surprised if he did," one member of the French delegation said.

Gathering morning and afternoon in the ancient Borromeo Palace on isolated Isola Bella Island, the heads of the three governments, with their right-hand assistants, discussed the situation growing out of the Reich's rearmament.

It was the first time since the Paris peace conference that the chieftains of the three great powers had met.

Official Communique.

The questioning lasted throughout the morning session. And the conferees returned after luncheon to face immediately the delicate issue presented by the French appeal to the League Council.

An official communique issued after the afternoon session—it was decided there would be no night session—said:

"The French delegates gave an exposition of the reasons which induced them to their present recourse to the League of Nations and the procedure to be adopted was examined."

That meant, informed quarters said, that France, while herself taking the responsibility of the appeal to the league, wants the approval of the other two members of the "Big Three."

A decided swing in Italian opinion away from the irritation at Britain's "negative policy" was noticeable. Observers expressed the opinion that this development might enable the three powers to find some common ground for action.

Hope for Agreement.

While the proposed general security pact, the keystone of the British policy as explained by MacDonald at the opening of the conference, and suggested subordinate agreements for mutual military assistance to reinforce the league covenant were not taken up during the five and one-half hours of discussion, the delegates were described as hopeful for an agreement.

The change in Italian attitude, coming after the past fortnight's almost constant carping at Britain's disinclination to join any three-power concerted action, was first noted in Mussolini's own newspaper, Il Popolo d'Italia.

It suggested, by indirection, that Germany, Russia and Poland should be invited to the Stresa conference. This, Italian sources said, constituted an attempt to bridge the diplomatic gap between the Italian and English viewpoint.

Great Britain, as the chief of her government explained today, stands steadfastly for the necessity of Germany's inclusion in any security system that is to be effective.

Italy, on the other hand, heretofore has been insistent that joint action should be worked out at Stresa with or without Germany.

The French, despite their action in appealing to Geneva, have been described as closer to the English view.

French View Accepted.

While the French brought with them from Paris proposals for bilateral mutual assistance pacts, such as that atbout to be concluded with Russia, it was understood the conferees accepted the French view that this secondary line of defense against war would not affect chances for an agreement on some general system.

The official communique issued this evening revealed that Simon's report on his visit to Berlin covered the German viewpoint "concerning the Eastern Locarno pact, the Danubian pact, the (Western European) aerial alliance and the League of Nations."

"Each of these arguments gave rise to preliminary discussions, after which an order of the day of work to be undertaken was picked," it continued. "At 1:30 p. m. discussion was suspended.

"The meeting began again at 5 p. m. In the afternoon's meeting the French delegates gave an exposition of the reasons which induced them to their present recourse to the League of Nations and the procedure to be adopted was examined.

"The meeting ended at 7:30 p. m. to be resumed at 9:30 a. m. Friday."

Tammany Dean Launches Blast At Roosevelt

Declares President Fears Tiger Opposition in 1936 Campaign.

By the Associated Press.

Albany, N. Y., April 11.—A Tammany stalwart in the Legislature let fly a blast of criticism at President Roosevelt today and brought into the open rumors of an impending break between the Administration and the Tiger.

Louis Cuvillier, dean of Tammany's delegation in the assembly, charged that the President was afraid of what Tammany might do to him in 1936 and was seeking to tear down Manhattan's famous political organization.

"He is afraid Tammany will come out for Al Smith or some other candidate for President in 1936," Cuvillier shouted.

The assemblyman charged that the President had "ordered" Gov. Herbert H. Lehman to have the Legislature reapportion the State so as to deprive Tammany of its strength in Congress.

Lehman Message a Cause.

Cuvillier's outburst was prompted by introduction last night of a congressional reapportionment bill which would deprive Manhattan of three representatives.

Another factor was Gov. Lehman's new message today prodding the Legislature to pass the legislative reapportionment bill. This would deprive Tammany of ten legislative seats. Tammany votes helped defeat this bill two weeks ago in spite of Postmaster General Farley's efforts in its behalf.

"Because Tammany Hall opposed the President," Cuvillier shouted, "he is afraid it will come out for Al Smith or some other candidate for President in 1936. If it hadn't been for Tammany Hall Mr. Roosevelt would not have been either Governor or President, nor would Gov. Lehman have been Lieutenant Governor or Governor."

Smith Group Formed.

By a coincidence, announcement was made in New York today by Charles J. Hellinger, president of the National List, Inc., that an "Alfred E. Smith for President" campaign would start in Chicago this summer. Hellinger's organization is composed of merchants and lawyers.

When word of the Cuvillier attack reached Representative Cullen (Democrat), of New York, leader of the Tammany delegation in the House at Washington, he smiled and said he did not think President Roosevelt had anything to do with the redistricting bill.

"Louis is a nice fellow, but there's not an atom of truth in it," Cullen said.

Representative O'Connor (Democrat), of New York, another Tammany leader, smiled and said:

"Tammany Hall will be with the President in 1936."

Political circles have made no secret of recent reports that the national Administration would withdraw its support from the Hall unless its legislators fell in line on reapportionment.

4 Students Are Fined For 'Thumbing' Rides

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Harrisonburg, April 11.—Four Bridgewater College students were found guilty of violating the Virginia hitch-hiking law yesterday before Trial Justice Hamilton Haas. Each was fined $1 and costs, bringing the total to $4.75 in each case.

This is the first conviction in Rockingham County—or in the Shenandoah Valley—for violating the hitch-hiking law.

The students said they could not pay the fine and would have to take the consequences. Justice Haas remarked that "the consequences" might mean a short term in jail, but extended the time for payment.

Gomer Pritchett, one of the students, pleaded guilty but the others, Ralph Dutton, Marvin Arion and Howard Lingo, said they were innocent. Justice Haas held that if one in a party attempted to "thumb" a ride for the crowd the others were equally guilty.

Homesteaders Say First Lady Is Old-Time Virginia Ruler

Mrs. Roosevelt, Son John Joined in Old Square Dances There.

By the Associated Press.

Reedsville, W. Va., April 11.—The charming Virginia reel, danced by gentlemen and their ladies when America was younger, is the favorite square-dance figure of the First Lady of the Land.

At the personal request of Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, that tune was played by barn-dance fiddlers while she danced with her homesteader friends at the Arthurdale subsistence project on an unannounced visit a week ago. It was all "off the record" so the homesteaders said nothing about it until Mrs. Roosevelt first described the dance at Washington today.

The homesteaders, former miners and their wives starting life anew on the Government-sponsored project after years of unemployment in the soft coal fields, said the First Lady danced some of the other figures also; that she bowed and swung gracefully to the old-time rhythms played and sung by the country folk.

Meanwhile her son, John, Harvard '38, who accompanied her on the visit, stood in the circle surrounding the dancers. His 6 feet 4 inches towered over most of those present and the youth appeared a bit nervous. But later he also joined in the dancing.

Mrs. Roosevelt stopped on one occasion to introduce her son to 9-year-old Party Work, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. G. R. Work, with whom the First Lady stayed at the Crown Mine during her first visit to this section.

"I want you to meet my oldest and best friend in West Virginia," she told her son.

Dressed in a modest outfit consisting of a blue skirt, white blouse and a blue sleeveless sweater, Mrs. Roosevelt joined a "set" of eight in the dancing. They did the "corner waltz," the "grapevine twist," and "Marching Through Georgia," and closed with the Virginia reel. Mrs. Roosevelt appeared to enjoy the experience and John admitted he had a "swell" time.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., April 11.—Gen. William Mitchell, retired, of Middleburg, presided at the meeting of the Fauquier County Fish and Game Association, held in Warrenton, when the organization of sportsmen passed a motion to reduce the daily bag limit on quail from 15 to 10 birds. Gen. Mitchell is president of the association and Fred W. Sharp, of The Plains, is secretary.

The association, making a drive against hawks, has paid bounties on 165 killed since May 20, 1934.

Sen. Neely's Son Shows That He Is Orator, Too

Senator Neely (Democrat), West Virginia, whose oratory is credited with contributing considerably to his political advancement, was proud yesterday that his son, John Champ Neely, had won oratorical honors at Washington and Lee College, where he is a student, according to the Associated Press.

The Senator's son was chosen to represent the college at a Statewide oratorical contest in Virginia next month. He also has been chosen to deliver his prize-winning address at the Rotary Club and the Methodist Church at Lexington, Va., seat of the college.

Burglar Suspect Held Under $10,000 Bond

Samuel Wooten, colored, 30, yesterday was held in bond of $10,000 when arraigned in Police Court on 21 housebreaking charges. An additional bond of $1,000 was set on a charge of carrying a concealed weapon.

Police who were looking for a liquor-law violator, arrested Wooten several days ago when he walked into a suspicious house, allegedly carrying the loot of one of his forays. Police charge that the man, a janitor at the Potomac Electric Power Co. offices, had stolen appliances valued at $1,200.

Pasturage and Pasteurization

Land values are high. Space is needed for people to live and work.

Eastern cities had a milk problem before the coming of the railroads. And there was no refrigeration to keep milk fresh through a long haul by cart.

How to keep enough cows where there was not enough grazing was a riddle.

One of the solutions did neither the cows nor the consumers any good.

Somebody in New York City hit on the idea of using distillery refuse for feed. The cows were kept as near the distilleries as possible. Slop drained from storage tanks into runways to the pens.

For nine months at a time cows were kept in the same stalls. There was no inspection.

"Sanitation" was a word in the dictionary.

In 1848 the New York Academy of Medicine declared that this milk was "positively detrimental especially to young children and is a fruitful cause of many fatal diseases."

For that sort of milk consumers paid 12 cents a quart.

Not until 1866 did New York city have a department of health.

In 1860 Louis Pasteur in France found a way to destroy harmful bacteria by heat.

Within the next sixty years "pasteurization" of milk became a general requirement of municipal health departments. Today, thanks to public health services and the organized milkman, no other food product is as thoroughly tested for purity as milk.

Retreat From The Prairies.

The exodus of dust-choked families from America's new agricultural desert contains all the elements of real tragedy. Only a few decades ago hopeful young pioneers were winding their way over these seemingly endless prairies, building clusters of adobe houses, turning up the rich soil and extending their wheat fields across the vast stretches previously covered by buffalo grass. Now their descendants are in retreat under ominous clouds of dust that darken the sky, fill the lungs and cover the remaining vestige of crops with a blanket of desolation.

Homes that have been built through years of struggle with the soil are being abandoned. Within a few months the prairies which farmers thought they had conquered have become an environment too hostile for human beings. Many are now asserting that the prairies should never have been plowed. But such belated wisdom is of no comfort to families huddled together on a wagon seat or in a decrepit automobile, fleeing from floating oceans of dust.

What the outcome of this grim maneuver of Nature will be no one can foresee. It is yet possible, of course, that the drought will be terminated and that farms which are literally being blown away will again lend themselves to cultivation. On the other hand, there appears to be grave danger that much of the plains country of western Kansas, Nebraska, Oklahoma and eastern Colorado will become a permanent desert—an ironical monument to the American trait of careless exploitation.

In the meantime another short wheat crop is in prospect. In some counties a large portion of the acreage has been abandoned. Conditions of the last few days suggest even a more acute shortage than is anticipated in the current crop forecast of the Department of Agriculture. Instead of recapturing some of our foreign markets, the wheat crop may be insufficient to meet domestic needs. In face of this situation the curtailment efforts of the AAA, representing a casual adventure in "planning," add piteous irony to a major national tragedy.

A Laugh On The "Free State."

Maryland papers should copy the news from Illinois, where the Legislature has been debating a bill similar to the vicious "teacher's oath" law recently passed by the Annapolis solons. That is, Maryland papers should copy if they are at all concerned over the Fascist spirit apparently mounting in a Commonwealth which has always taken just pride in its traditional liberalism.

Certain of the midland legislators recognized the intolerable implications of this attempt to legislate loyalty. To them, the proposal constituted an unwarranted invasion of individual conscience and, therefore, offered a serious threat to the fundamental concept of Americanism. Wise in the ways of legislating, they adopted the strategy of fighting absurdity with absurdity. An amendment was put forward which would have compelled male teachers to wear red, white and blue collars and female teachers to dress with red, white and blue cuffs. Amid gales of laughter it was passed by a viva voce vote and solemnly declared adopted by the Speaker.

Later, on a record vote, it was snowed under, but not before the fatuousness of the entire proposal had been impressed on the assembly. Thus a sense of proportion supplanted the hysteria stirred up by those who perennially cry out for "a higher Americanism" by appealing to that most un-American of qualities—intolerance.

One More Point.

No panacea for traffic accidents has been found, but District officials are making a conscientious effort to remove the hazards encountered daily by Washington motorists and pedestrians. Mechanical tests for automobiles permitted to operate in the District should have been instituted long ago. Authorities believe that only a small percentage of the fatal motor accidents can be traced to mechanical defects. In the situation with which Washington is now confronted, however, every possible safeguard should be considered.

The impounding of parked cars that impede traffic, more rigid control over the fixing of tickets for infraction of minor regulations, and the creation of police magistrates to handle petty cases, may not seem to have a direct bearing upon safe transportation. These suggestions are nevertheless important for the psychological effect they may have upon the operators of motor cars. Strict enforcement of every regulation is conducive to safe driving.

If the Commissioners would also sponsor more thorough examinations for drivers seeking permits, their safety program would be fairly comprehensive.

New York Goes Ahead.

In response to the urging of Gov. Lehman, the New York State Legislature has passed a compulsory unemployment insurance measure designed to fit into the Federal plan sketchily outlined in the social security bill now before the House.

Attempts to make introduction of the State system contingent upon passage of the Federal measure were defeated and March 1, 1936, was unconditionally set as the date upon which the tax provisions of the act will become effective. With certain exceptions, a flat levy is imposed upon the pay rolls of employers, rising from 1 per cent in 1936 to 3 per cent by 1938, to be paid into a State insurance fund. Critics maintain that this tax will impose a heavy burden upon New York's industries, which might be placed at a serious disadvantage with competitors in other parts of the country, if the Federal plan should fail of passage.

There is much justice in this contention. Indeed, the Federal measure was designed to eliminate the handicaps resulting from independent State action, in addition to encouraging the States to establish unemployment insurance systems by crediting their unemployment funds with 90 per cent of the proceeds of the proposed Federal tax upon pay rolls. Charges that the cost of the system would drive industries out of New York in great numbers are doubtless exaggerated. Nevertheless, employers within the State are heavily taxed, and additional burdens not borne by outside competitors would be especially onerous.

So far, the Wisconsin experiment in unemployment insurance has been of too limited duration to provide a test of its efficacy. However, various private systems of insurance within New York State are in operation, indicating that some companies at least would not be adversely affected by a general compulsory system, although they may object to contributing to a State fund under a law that does not allow for retention of company systems.

The New York plan is open to criticism in a number of details, notably in its failure to place part of the burden of the insurance system upon employes. It is, however, a fact worth noting that New York is eager to provide some systematic form of protection against the hazards of unemployment, despite the difficulties placed in her way by delay in securing Federal action. If Congress would make haste to impose a Federal levy to safeguard progressive Commonwealths against the penalties resulting from independent action, more States would, no doubt, show a willingness to cooperate in a program of unemployment insurance. The Ellenbogen unemployment insurance bill for the District of Columbia, for instance, has been held up in committee until the House has acted on the national social security legislation.

However, congressional delay in taking final action upon the omnibus social security bill is not only easy to understand, but is essential in view of the number of unrelated projects included. If the limited provisions that have a bearing upon unemployment insurance were segregated from the present hodgepodge, they could be dealt with expeditiously in a separate bill, and passed after intelligent discussion of their merits. As matters stand, however, States that are eager to go ahead with plans for instituting insurance against unemployment fear to anticipate Federal action.

Nobody Wants It.

Growers of cotton and manufacturers of cotton goods do not always see eye to eye. The former want to obtain the highest possible prices for their crop. The latter believe that their own advantage lies in buying raw materials at the lowest possible prices. In the competitive struggle of the moment the economic interdependence of both groups is often forgotten. For that reason it is interesting to note that the cotton-processing tax has made allies of the farmers who grow cotton and the millmen who process it. Congress is now being petitioned by representatives of both groups to abolish this levy, which adds 4.2 cents per pound to the price of the raw material.

It is not difficult to discover why the textile mills, confronted by rising costs of operating, and falling business resulting from the higher prices of cotton goods, should denounce "this crucifying levy." But why should farmers petition a paternalistic government to abolish the imposition, applied to finance the benefit payments which they receive under the AAA restriction plan? The answer is that evidently the cotton farmer has learned some elementary facts about the casual connection between high prices and declining demands for his products. He has discovered that the consumer of cotton—that is, the mill-owner—does not and can not buy as much cotton if he must pay processing taxes, in addition to the various other additional outlays made necessary by code restrictions and artificial scarcity of raw material.

To be sure, the cotton farmer still wants subsidies. But he at least understands now that subsidies which represent a diversion of income from his customers are by no means an unmixed blessing. While the attempt to induce the Government to use work-relief funds to finance benefit payments is subject to criticism on other grounds, it must be taken seriously as an indirect accusation against the deficiencies of the AAA method.

With mills closing because of consumer resistance to enforced advances in cotton goods prices; with the export trade in the doldrums; with foreign cloth competing actively even over high tariff barriers; with employes rebelling against the resultant shrinkage in earnings, despite code increases in wage rates; and with both farmer and mill-owner united in opposition to the processing tax, the prospect seems gloomy. Neither the NRA nor the AAA can look with pride upon the upshot of their plans to restore prosperity to all branches of the cotton industry by raising the prices of raw materials and finished products, without assurance of market outlets to absorb these high-priced commodities.

Insatiable.

Following the President's announcement that the price paid for newly mined domestic silver would be raised to 71 cents per ounce, the Senate Agriculture Committee has approved the Wheeler 16-to-1 mandatory silver purchase bill.

That directs the Treasury to buy at least 50,000,000 ounces of silver monthly. Purchases would not be suspended until 16 ounces of silver equaled in purchasing power one ounce of gold; that is, reached $2.18 per ounce. Here is a characteristic response to efforts of the Administration to propitiate the insatiable silver bloc. By this time it must be apparent to all that the more the Government does to still their clamor, the shriller become the demands for further action.

Although the latest advance in domestic buying prices, if viewed as an isolated development, may not appear to be of great importance, it has followed upon a rapid rise in world prices for which this Government is directly or indirectly responsible. At the new buying price of 71 cents per ounce silver will have a purchasing power 44 per cent above the level of 1926. Moreover, considering that its price approximated 25 cents per ounce when President Roosevelt came into office, silver producers and speculators ought to feel more than grateful for what has already been accomplished in their behalf.

There is one department of the Government that has more than ample reason to resent our silver-buying policies. The Department of State does not find it easy to maintain cordial relations with China while the Treasury is creating severe financial embarrassments for that silver-using country. To combat the deflationary effects of the rapid rise in silver prices, China has discussed the possibilities of instituting a managed currency. The latest announcement will, of course, add to her financial difficulties and further arouse a legitimate hostility to this country.

However, the members of the silver bloc have long since relinquished the pretension that they are moved by a desire to raise silver prices for the benefit of China. Undoubtedly, they will continue to urge accelerated purchasing of the metal at rising prices in world markets, with accompanying inflation of the currency through issuance of certificates secured by silver arbitrarily valued at $1.29 per ounce.

If that price should eventually be attained in the open market, the 16-to-1 advocates would still be waiting to press with renewed vigor for the passage of their still more ambitious measure.

And Unashamed.

Possibly that country is happiest which has the fewest laws. Probably—at least through the abundance of its legislation—America now outranks pre-Valera Ireland as the most distressful country that ever you have seen. And certainly these United States of ours have achieved a championship in the making of laws which, whatever legal digests may do with them, the ordinary citizen is incapable of digesting. New York's anti-nudist statute provides a shining example.

Just when a Manhattan magistrate decides that so-called "strip-dances" are an art, not a crime, the sensitive Senate in Albany passes a hurried bill making it a misdemeanor "to practice nudism within the State." The mind of a mere citizen can comprehend that "nudism is not solitary nakedness, within the meaning of the act." But this is as far as the layman dare venture into the riotous realms of interpretation.

During the Revolutionary Era of France, the government issued a decree forbidding Heaven to perform miracles. In contemporary New York what will authority say about the not infrequent appearance of twins—one male, the other female?

Babel Up To Date.

From the Omaha World-Herald.

"Roy Harrop, of Council Bluffs, national chairman of the Farmer-Labor Party, has proposed to bring all radical leaders together in Omaha, July 1 to 4. It would be to organize a 'strong third party movement.'"—News item.

It would be an extremely interesting gathering, and one which an enterprising promoter could probably finance with an admission fee. It would be worth the money to see them all under one roof and to hear them all trying to talk together. It might even be taken on tour. But that will never be more than a promoter's dream. Too many of the stars are doing altogether too well as individual performers.

As for a strong third party movement that took them all in, that, too, would be one of the marvels, not of the century but of human history. It would be the story of the Tower of Babel brought up to date, with only one important difference. The organizers of the tower party spoke a common language until after they were organized, but the confusion of tongues already exists among those elements out of which it is dreamed to build a third party movement.

Pigs To Pork.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I am so glad Mr. Wallace explained his pig-slaughtering spree to the Red Cross delegates. I can't think of any group of people who would be more interested in an explanation justifying the destruction of food than the representatives of this vast army of volunteer relief workers. It is to be hoped that their minds were open and agile enough to follow the Secretary's reasoning. Perhaps the term "wagged their heads" was the reporter's own and should have been "nodded." One always feels more comfortable over a nod than a wag.

When a certain farmer in a Northern State was paid for not raising a goodly number of pigs last year, when he never had indulged in pig raising, I was hopeful that the program of the AAA would finally broaden enough to reach the suburbs so that I could get my share of the pork by not raising chickens in our neighborhood, where crowing is definitely frowned upon.

My hopes of sharing in this "more abundant life" by not doing something had about folded up until Mr. Wallace fanned it into fresh flame last night. My only criticism is that, being the mathematician he is, why didn't Confucius—I mean Wallace—tell us to slaughter 12,000,000 instead of 6,000,000 80-pound pigs so they wouldn't have eaten 100,000,000 bushels of corn to become 440-pound hogs if they had lived, so that we wouldn't have gluttonously eaten twice as many by July or August, 1934, than we otherwise would because they were cheap, but would have been forced by our pocketbooks to control our appetites to half as many, thus creating a surplus because the hogs now brought to market are heavier—weighted down as they are with sorrow over lost relatives and old-age obesity?

I am going to find my career in the contemplation of my three cats and their possible progeny, all multipliable by 9, and the number of mice potentially involved. As soon as I have worked out something helpful from it I will share it with Henry, so he can estimate, for the edification of mankind, how many mice had a Chinaman's chance to survive if Confucius hadn't interfered.

Maryland's Alternative.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Your special correspondent, Prof. V. J. Wyckoff, who holds the chair of economics at St. John's College, Annapolis, fairly illustrates, in his article in The Post of April 9, the collegiate approach to problems of taxation.

He damns the sales tax with faint praise, agrees with the bulk of the present students of the merchandise tax problems that the absorption by the public of the burden of the tax is somewhat questionable, and holds that it may in part land on the producer, in part on the dealer and in part on the consumers. Prof. Wyckoff figures that the tax will gross $4,100,000 and that its collection will involve 5 per cent of that amount. He is willing to admit that it will rest more heavily on those least able to pay it if it reaches down to the consumers.

There is nothing complex about taxation save as selfish interests make it complex. A clause in the constitution of Maryland permits each and every taxing unit in the State to exempt from taxation improvements on real estate, among other subjects of taxation. The City of Baltimore has over half the ground site values of the State. If Baltimore should choose to exempt improvements from taxation and increase the taxation of ground values to make up the deficit, rents would fall about 50 per cent and requirements for public relief would shrink in at least the same proportion. If every taxing community in the State would adopt the same policy, the need of public relief would practically disappear.

Light Money.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Suppose you wanted to send 57 cents to a man in Pittsburgh—or Oshkosh—what would you do? You would be ashamed to send a check for anything less than a dollar, of course. You would get postage stamps to make up your remittance.

Why not use aluminum for our subsidiary coinage? That metal is moldable and valuable and has most of the qualities desired in coin. And it is light in weight. You could make up your 57 cents very easily in aluminum coin and a 3-cent stamp would take it half around the world.

And there is an asset in aluminum coinage. We now have $117,000,000 in minor coin. We could make and put out twice that much in aluminum money and make a handsome profit for the hard-pressed Treasury. Then think how it would facilitate and multiply the small transactions of business generally.

Celebrating The Pony Express.

In view of the fact that the pony express system, which was started 75 years ago this week, actually functioned for less than two years, the fame that it has achieved may seem somewhat out of proportion to the service it performed. But although in the period of their operation (April, 1860, to October, 1861) the pony express riders did carry several important documents between St. Joseph, Mo., and Sacramento, Calif., notably President Lincoln's inaugural address on the eve of the Civil War. It was the courage and resourcefulness displayed in their brief enterprise that have won for them their enduring prestige.

The pony express was probably the swiftest and most highly organized courier service that the world has ever known. Certainly, having regard for the distance traveled and the dangers encountered, it represented an achievement that, of its kind, has never been surpassed. That mechanical marvel, the telegraph, readily supplanted it. But the pony express was the culmination of thousands of years of communication without mechanical aid, when the world had to depend upon the runner or the rider. It also typified in a high degree the personal qualities that went into the development of the West. In the history of communication its importance is not great, but its place in American tradition is valued and secure.

Reactions To 'Strike' Criticism.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: I appreciate the respect that The Post extends to its readers by giving to them the prerogative to interpret the news. I would like to point out in your columns an intolerable situation, which many realize exists, but which few dare expose.

Certain so-called patriotic organizations in this city have attempted, and are now attempting, to foist their standard brand of Americanism on the students and teachers of our high schools and universities. They have denounced and attempted to prohibit progressive change in the curricula of the city's high schools.

One such organization but last week arbitrarily became the court of last appeal on the question of the proposed student strike against war. It declared that said strike was unlawful and communistic in its inception, and thereupon decided "by any means necessary" to prevent the demonstration. It appears that sitting as a council on education they have shown themselves about as well qualified as certain groups allege the "college professors" are in running the Government.

As Dr. Hopkins, of Dartmouth, so ably pointed out in your columns this week, "Americanism is liberalism in thought and action . . . The very people who shout so loudly for 'Americanism' in education appear to be the least practical about it."

As a university student, I would like to broach the idea that I have the right to, and the ability to, decide between the propaganda, or, if I so choose, take neither of them.

Groups threatening to prevent the strike might well realize that academic freedom is as essential a part of our national life as is freedom of the press. To threaten to prevent these students from expressing their opinions is to jeopardize the most fundamental element of our democratic life. Should these groups be allowed to dictate as to the thinking processes of the American people? Have they the right to force students to accept their ready-made solutions to national problems?

JOHN COGGINS.

Washington, April 10.

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Although I have been an active opponent of the proposed student strike against war, I can not bring myself to approve the pronouncements of certain loud-mouthed "patriots" threatening to prevent the strike "by any means necessary."

To attempt to deny to any group of Americans one of their fundamental liberties is to shake the foundations of American liberty—that liberty which these "patriots" claim to love so dearly.

The idea of a student strike based on issues upon which they can exert no immediate influence seems childish in itself. In this particular instance the strike has been made even more absurd by introducing several unrelated issues into a protest originally planned as a demonstration against war. Nevertheless, those students who feel moved to participate in this strike have an inalienable right to so do.

Born—Not Made.

Post Office, Friday.

ROMANY, the speech of the Gypsies—Rommany, if you prefer—is one of the puzzle tongues. Its origin is as doubtful as Basque. Its variations are as multitudinous as those of Chinese. Perhaps an Indic language, it adopts, generally quite metamorphoses, new words, at every frontier it crosses—and it crosses all frontiers. But it remains unique and occult. Above all, the people to whom it is native—forever familiar to all other peoples, yet forever intransigently alien — prefer to guard it from strangers: Romany is an itinerant city-wall which effectually protects the cityless Gypsies from ultimate invasion.

In the last analysis, it has baffled the greatest scholars. Hundreds of non-Gypsies speak it—superficially. Despite their longest labors, however, not Borrow, or Bataillard or Grellmann, not even Crofton or the American Leland and Sinclair, ever really mastered it.

Many have made translations out of Romany, the accuracy of which passed unchallenged solely because only the Gypsies themselves were qualified to challenge it—and maintained scornful silence. Into Romany almost nobody attempted to translate anything—especially into that of the Bulgarian Gypsies, whose dialect appears to be especially formidable.

Nevertheless, at last this feat has been achieved. The Gypsies, surprised out of their legendary taciturnity, applaud it.

Consequently, pundits at the Sorbonne, Budapest, Oxford, Tubingen and Berlin join in its praises. The academic world wants to honor the triumphant linguist.

Whereas the triumphant linguist doesn't want to be honored.

"I am a farmer," he says. "I can't afford to leave my farm for more than an occasional day's journey."

He says this, we understand, in English. He speaks, we understand, a fistful of languages.

Yet he never was given any education, in the ordinary sense, beyond that provided through the third class of a Bulgarian village school and a course or two at the Philippopolis "gymnasium!"

The Gypsies are commonly considered a race without a religion. That's erroneous. There are some Roman Catholic Gypsies in France and Spain, some Mohammedan Gypsies elsewhere. Everywhere the bulk of the Gypsies are Eastern Orthodox—nearly all the Gypsies in America. Every year, the Greek priests in Baltimore are called upon to baptize Gypsy babies born in caravans crossing Maryland. As an old Romany once naively explained to that authority, Col. Henry W. Shoemaker:

"If we don't go to church, it's because we are too hurried. It isn't because we don't believe."

So the Metropolitan Stephan of Bulgaria decided to create a Gypsy Mission: There were priests who spoke Romany; there was no priest who considered himself capable of translating the Gospels. Then somebody heard that all Gypsies passing anywhere near Kiusse-Mouratovo always flocked to its "scribe," or public (and, in this case, unpaid) letter-writer, to have all their writing done. This was Atanaskieff—and he said he'd try to translate the Gospel according to St. Matthew into Romany.

The present furore in scholastic circles is the result.

Col. Shoemaker, who is one of the ablest diplomats America ever sent to the Balkans, thus quotes the modest prodigy:

"I was born in 1864. My mother died when I was a baby. As a volunteer, I took part in the Serbo-Bulgarian war of '85 and have a silver medal—was elected county councilor in 1911, have been for 12 years a member of the church choir, taught for a couple of years, was village mayor from '94 to 1908.

"As a young man, I had a great liking for languages. But my translation of the Evangel of St. Matthew was not easy for me: I had to work in an 'uncultured' tongue which gives small choice of words and no printed books at all. [illegible] I have made a Gypsy-Bu[illegible] dictionary and a Romany t[illegible]ation of the Evangel of St. Joh[illegible] also. These require only a re-copying to be printed."

A. Atanaskieff has moved to the home of his son, Atanas, and is there, at Tatar-Pazardjik, completing his work in the intervals between his farm duties. That picturesque old village used to be known to the European capitals only for the turtles it sent their best restaurants and its copper-flavored carp which their epicures loved. An odd fish it has caught now—it is exporting erudition!

What's more, it will probably soon import a lot. Since A. Atanaskieff just won't go to the acclaiming pundits of the universities, those pundits plan pilgrimages into his wilderness.

Linguists share something with poets, after all. Some of them have been made linguists, but the best of them were born that way.

Bronx Cheers Anglers For Urbanized Trout

By Ralph E. Renaud.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

New York.

IN the spring a livelier iris changes on the burnished trout and the restless Izaak Waltons get their fishing tackle out. Magazine covers burgeon with pictures of happy anglers, hip-deep in mountain torrents, and barefoot boys with face of tan, proudly displaying strings of pin-caught perch and catfish. Rural front yards craftily advertise their Helgamites and night-crawlers to bait the universal urge. And city dwellers, like Chaucer's Canterbury hitch-hikers, long to "goon on pilgrimages" to sylvan streams where the suckers still snap at a hook instead of booking tables at night clubs. But why? What's the matter with doing one's spring fishing right in the middle of the city and letting the old bus rest in the garage?

Anyway, that's how they figured it up in the Bronx. Historians of this district will recall that last fall thousands of cute little ale-wives kept popping out of local water faucets, in effect, "Good-morning-right-back-at-you-folks." Then they not bigger fish? The Bronx is a miraculous borough and no doubt inhabited by many mythical characters, including Simple Simon, who fished for whales in a tub. So this spring they have perfectly edible trout practically flowing through the city streets. And has there been a piscatorial panic up there all week long? To answer frankly in the French vernacular, "Et comment."

Without any particular fooforaw, the State Conservation Department dumped 560 brown trout in the Bronx River and notified the populace that they could be wooed with permits. Some of them—the fish, not the populace—ranged up to 18 inches in length. This has enabled many imaginative Bronx fishermen to pull trout more than a yard long out of the still waters. Others have actually caught some fish, and the whole town is ringing with their exploits.

This hearty acclamation, especially from those who can't get up that far, sounds exactly like a chorus of Bronx cheers.

THE season opened on Sunday and the World and his Wife turned up, not to mention the cousins and the aunts. There were fishermen with flies (a few), fishermen with nets, fishermen with tin cans and fishermen with rocks to hurl from the river bank.

Including small boys who dangled their lines from tree limbs, there were approximately 50 fishermen to every fish, ranging in age from antediluvians in the "I-remember-when" stage to toddlers who insisted upon being fish themselves, by toppling into the drink. A few men with the proper equipment just couldn't get through the crowd. Nobody bothered much about permits. Guards supplied by the State Conservation Commission rushed in consternation to the telephone for instructions. The State Conservation Commission became the State Conversation Commission and stopped right there. There was nothing to do but let the fish-mad throng alone. A good time was had by all, except the guards and the fish.

The fish were willing enough to play the game, but the technique of the Bronx proved too much for their sensibilities. They blushed and withdrew. About 35 of them could not overcome their curiosity and got caught. Sheer weight of numbers overwhelmed the fish at 233d street and most of the finny victims got the hook in that vicinity. A few are said to have died of chagrin when they saw the assembled fish-luring paraphernalia.

Some of the experts think the B[illegible] River is too citified a stream for [illegible] fish to live in, anyway. If the worms hold out they may all have gone into the skillet by the end of the week. But it was a superb gesture at that. It is certainly something to step into the elevator, pass the time of day with the doorman, hail a taxi and go fishing for trout on a city street. Rural weeklies please copy.

HOW familiar is a familiar quotation? Christopher Morley, the sage of Forty-fifth street, will have the task of deciding now that he has become Main Guy for the next edition of "Bartlett's Familiar Quotations." The job consists, not of putting in all the things you can remember, but of keeping out all the things you can't remember well enough. A lot of quotable stuff has been tossed off in the last 20 years, and much of it is clamoring to get within classic covers. Shakespeare, the Bible and Anon will still remain the old standbys, but there will be some new faces peeking out between the leaves, too.

Th last edition, though brought up to date in 1914, by Nathan Haskell Dole, was heedless of many remarks and many names which are fraught with meaning to the present generation. Here are some of the people whose epigrams will appear in Bartlett for the first time: John Masefield, English laureate; Herman Melville, whose "Moby Dick" has suffered a sea change into popularity; Peter Dunne, who invented the salty Mr. Dooley; George Ade, who reinvented American slang; Don Marquis, whose Archie, Mehitabel and the Old Soak comprise the Three Disgraces of our lighter literature, and O. Henry, who taught the short story how to end itself.

Editor Morley hasn't yet decided what he is going to do with radio talkers, which leaves Mrs. Roosevelt's position a bit dubious.

NEW YORK has a beautiful new word, "Boondoggle," which every one is tossing in his neighbor's teeth. It popped out in the investigation of relief activities and for several days nobody knew exactly what it meant though quite a bit of the relief funds have gone into boondoggling and there are said to be many on the rolls who swing a mean boondoggle.

At first it was thought to be a form of folk or eurythmic dancing. It now turns out that a boondoggle was named after a Rochester baby by a Rochester Boy Scout and applied to a plait of gayly dyed leather strips wound around a hat band. By derivation it now means a home-made gadget and, by extension, any hobby practiced with the aid of the taxpayers' money.

In the bright lexicon of American slang the old-fashioned, "I'll be horn-swoggled!" may now be replaced by, "I'll be boondoggled!"

THIS is the time of year when the lesser drama begins to trek into the countryside to bloom under the hayloft. The Red Barn Theater is about to open in Locust Valley and Walter Hartwig is casting about for his summer shows at Ogonquit, Me., where Maude Adams' comeback was attempted last year. Meanwhile the Jitney Players are rolling into New York from the Southland and expect shortly to roll northward with the summer sun.

The Jitney Players, a modern variant of the old strolling players, have been jaunting about on trucks for thirteen years now. One of their trucks lets down its sides and becomes a very serviceable stage. Their repertoire this season splits into three types, the eighteenth century classic, "She Stoops to Conquer," which the universities like; "The Streets of New York," a grand old melodrama of the '50s, offered in a spirit of hilarity; and "Adventures in Oz," dramatized from Frank Baum's magic kingdom and presented for the youngsters.

THE human passion to classify is represented in one of the great New York department stores by a long counter devoted entirely to greeting cards and split into these designations: "Convalescent and Sympathy," "Wedding Congrats.," "Anniversaries," "Family Birthdays," "General Humorous," "Easter" and "Children's Birthdays." That oughtn't to leave anyone at a loss unless he happens to be thinking of Christmas or What to Send the Income Tax Collector.

Thrift, Horatio, thrift, is the watchword in the theater these days. Two of the biggest current successes on Broadway cost less than $300 each to produce. They are Clifford Odet's "Till the Day I Die" and "Waiting for Lefty." The scenery for the first cost $225 and the set for the second stood the producers in exactly (and incredibly) $8.00.

A big headline in one of the local papers caused momentary terror among Brooklyn home makers the other day. It read, "Strikes to Close Rubber Plants."

Committee Maps Plans For Child Health Fete

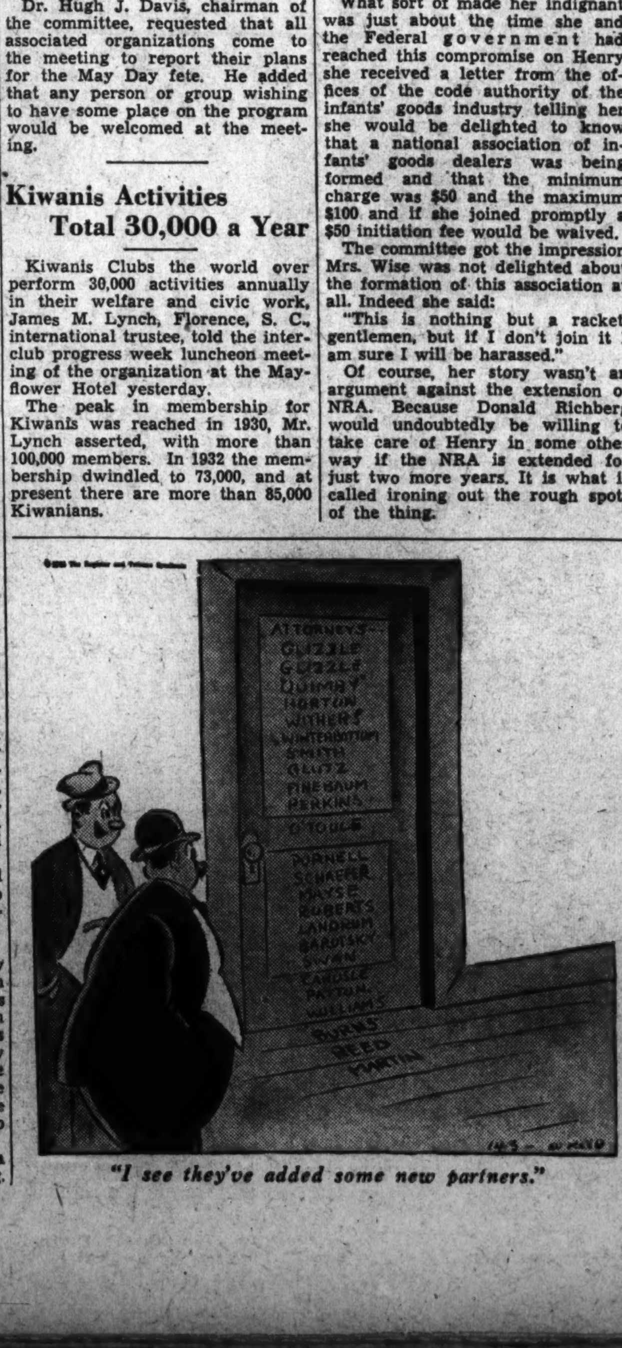
The general committee on arrangements for the coming celebration of child health activities on May Day yesterday called a meeting of all organizations interested in child welfare and child health for today at 11 a. m., in the board room of the District Building.

Dr. Hugh J. Davis, chairman of the committee, requested that all associated organizations come to the meeting to report their plans for the May Day fete. He added that any person or group wishing to have some place on the program would be welcomed at the meeting.

Kiwanis Activities Total 30,000 a Year

Kiwanis Clubs the world over perform 30,000 activities annually in their welfare and civic work, James M. Lynch, Florence, S. C., international trustee, told the inter-club progress week luncheon meeting of the organization at the Mayflower Hotel yesterday.

The peak in membership for Kiwanis was reached in 1930, Mr. Lynch asserted, with more than 100,000 members. In 1932 the membership dwindled to 73,000, and at present there are more than 85,000 Kiwanians.

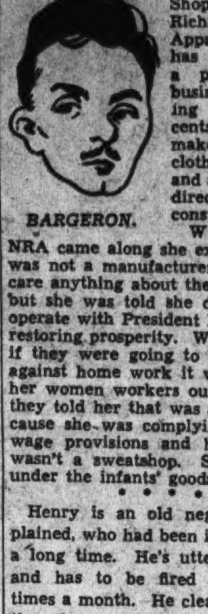


"I see they've added some new partners."

Along The Potomac

With Carlisle Bargeron

The NRA And Henry.



BARGERON.

THE problem of Henry under the NRA was related to the Senate Finance Committee yesterday by a Mrs. Wise, who conducts Children's Shop, Inc., at Richmond, Va. Apparently she has worked up a pretty good business by paying women 30 cents an hour to make children's clothes at home and selling them directly to the consumer.

When the NRA came along she explained she was not a manufacturer and didn't care anything about the Blue Eagle but she was told she ought to cooperate with President Roosevelt in restoring prosperity. Well, she said, if they were going to have a rule against home work it would throw her women workers out of jobs, so they told her that was all right because she was complying with the wage provisions and her business wasn't a sweatshop. She was put under the infants' goods code.

• • • •

Henry is an old negro, she explained, who had been in the family a long time. He's utterly shiftless and has to be fired about three times a month. He cleans up about the place. However, to help Mr. Roosevelt restore prosperity and to raise the living standards of the South, she decided to pay Henry $12.50 a week.

Pretty soon along came an NRA inspector to look at her pay roll. The inspector, she said, took a look at the pay roll and then a look at Henry and said:

"You are paying Henry a gracious plenty."

"I want to make sure I'm doing right," she said. The more the inspector looked at Henry the more convinced he was she was paying him enough.

• • • •

Ater a while, however, along came another inspector, a different one. He looked at the payroll and said Henry had to be paid $14. Maybe he didn't look at Henry. Mrs. Wise didn't explain. Anyway, when she told him a previous inspector had said $12.50 was a gracious plenty for Henry he insisted that it had to be $14 for Henry.

She discussed it with Henry. "Henry," she said, "you are just as shiftless as you can be. You know you aren't worth $14 a week." Henry, it seems, sort of agreed with her.

The more she thought of Henry and studied him the older and more shiftless he seemed to get. The thought occurred to her that Henry was superannuated.

"Henry," she asked him one day, "how old are you?" This was greater energy than Henry had been called upon to exert in many a day, but it is understood to be permissible under section 7(a).

Henry allowed he really didn't know, but the people he had formerly worked for had told him he was about 50.

"You must be at least 90," Mrs. Wise said she told him.

• • • •

The matter of Henry's superannuation was taken up with the Federal government. It was finally ruled that a doctor would have to certify he was incapable of work. After much hemming and hawing the doctor ruled he was capable of only part-time work. Mrs. Wise seemed to think that is all he did before. He is now receiving, as I recall it, $9 a week.

What sort of made her indignant was just about the time she and the Federal government had reached this compromise on Henry she received a letter from the offices of the code authority of the infants' goods industry telling her she would be delighted to know that a national association of infants' goods dealers was being formed and that the minimum charge was $50 and the maximum $100 and if she joined promptly a $50 initiation fee would be waived.

The committee got the impression Mrs. Wise was not delighted about the formation of this association at all. Indeed she said:

"This is nothing but a racket, gentlemen, but if I don't join it I am sure I will be harassed."

Of course, her story wasn't an argument against the extension of NRA. Because Donald Richberg would undoubtedly be willing to take care of Henry in some other way if the NRA is extended for just two more years. It is what is called ironing out the rough spots of the thing.

No End of Books

John Hays Hammond's Grand Autobiography of 80 Years of Far Mines and Great Men.

By Theodore Hall.

I'VE just been gazing out a back window of our apartment at a great stone pile of a house 200 yards off—the Hammond house on Kalorama road. It looks very lonesome by day; at night, with only a bare electric light bulb down in a lower room at the east end, it looks even more forlorn. But never have I found the sight quite so depressing as today, now that I've read "The Autobiography of John Hays Hammond" (Farrar & Rinehart, 2 vols., $5) and know pretty well what manner of man it was who used to live there. It's a feeling—and you will share it as soon as you read the book—due simply to the fact that Mr. Hammond isn't there.

Now a career full of encounters with the interesting and the great is not exactly a unique thing in the world. Dozens of lively and witty memoirs exist. But Mr. Hammond's autobiography shows one thing better than does almost any of them—that a man does not meet and get to hobnobbing with Presidents and premiers, with bandits and aviators and industrial tycoons—just because he is himself a tycoon, or a Democratic committeeman, or, as in Mr. Hammond's case, a great mining engineer. He becomes their familiar because he is first an admirable and a likable man.

And so plainly do those qualities shine out between the lines of John Hays Hammond's memories of 80 years that just to catch a glimpse of the solitariness of 2221 Kalorama is to miss him.

YOU can read the 775 pages of the autobiography for many things, so rich and bursting with action and anecdote are they. One point which will not escape you is their span—1855-1935 (though I might better leave this to the historians of 2135 A. D.) seems to these eyes the most interesting in the history of the world. Certainly it covers the world's great change.

To give it terms used by Lewis Mumford in "Technics and Civilization," the period began with the last remnants of the "ecotechnic" phase—the use of wood and animal power. Mr. Hammond was brought up in pioneer California, remembers the pony express. Next came the "paleotechnic" era—steam, coal, large-scale mining. Mr. Hammond made his fortune by that very technique. Now we are entering on the "neotechnic" era—delicate chemistry and electricity. And Mr. Hammond sat in his great castle at Gloucester, overlooking the Reef of Norman's Woe, and watched his son invent the remote control of ships by radio.

Or you can look at Mr. Hammond's span of years in another light. An Army child, he was brought up modestly, had to forge his own way and build his success in typically independent fashion. And now in these late years he has been a sturdy advocate of the World Court. There is the path from individualism to co-operation.

• • • •

THEN, too, the autobiography is a grand adventure story, as far-flung as "Anthony Adverse," almost as exciting as "King Solomon's Mines." Yaqui Indian bandits and Mexican revolutions, mining outposts and hazardous treks—these are but samplings of the spice of danger he met on four continents. Once in South Africa he was a member of the Committee of Reform which exposed the stringencies of the Boer President, Oom Paul Kruger, and found himself condemned for high treason and sentenced to death. Luckily that was changed to life imprisonment, luckier yet he and the committee got off with a fine of $125,000.

And the book is a record of intimate pictures of great men. Mr. Hammond names the greatest he knew—Cecil Rhodes, with whom he worked in South Africa, pioneering in the famous deep-level mines; Count Witte, Russian minister and diplomat, who practically won back the Russo-Japanese War at the Peace of Portsmouth, 1905, and for whom he surveyed Russia's mineral resources, and Porfirio Diaz, President of Mexico, for whose modernization of that country Mr. Hammond has the highest praise. Dozens of other figures come on the stage: Kipling, King George, Lindbergh, the Guggenheims, Gloucester fishermen, Montana roughnecks, all the Presidents but Arthur in his lifetime—that will show you the range.

Here is Wilson on a train, talking over the Mexican problem with Mr. Hammond and going to bed somewhat troubled, for the Governor of New Jersey woke up all the passengers in the night with a wild Princeton yell. Here is Harding telling Mr. Hammond: "If Wood had taken your advice, he would have secured the nomination." Here is Mr. Hammond persuading the much relieved Hoover, when Lindbergh invited them both for an airplane ride, that as the future President he had no right to take chances with his life.

And here is Mr. Hammond walking out of 2221 Kalorama across the street to the vacant lot which he has kept clear for children to play in, and seeing a little boy lying flat on the sidewalk and squalling at the top of his voice.

"What's his name?" he asked the distracted nurse.

"John."

"John," Mr. Hammond cried, "did you see that big black bear run across the street?"

The screaming stopped, and John looked up. "Where?" he asked.

"It's too bad you've been making such a noise—you must have scared him away! There he goes! Come on, maybe we can catch up to him!" And hand in hand Mr. Hammond went off with the calmed and fascinated little John. The next day Mr. Hammond had a note, thanking him for his kindness to her family, from Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt.

• • • •

"IN the entire history of American writing," says my brother book reviewer, William Soskin, inthe New York American, "there has been no event comparable to the publication of 'The Autobiography of John Hays Hammond.'" Good round words, and certainly unabashed, but after my hours with the book I know how Mr. Soskin feels.

For I could break into a similar strain myself—there's nothing for you to do, but to get a copy and enjoy a thoroughly captivating book. I was going to go on into praises of Mr. Hammond's career which might smack of eulogy and epitaph, if I hadn't remembered that on his eightieth birthday the other day he bought his first airplane.

Michael Pupin

By Wm. Lyon Phelps

THE death of Michael Pupin on March 12 removed a man of genius and one whose loss is acutely felt by innumerable individuals who loved him. He was 76 years old.

He published many books and articles in his own field of scientific research. But the book read by the largest number of persons and which may be regarded as an addition to American literature is his autobiography, "From Immigrant to Inventor," and I am glad to say that only a few weeks before his death a popular edition of this extraordinary book appeared; the technical parts have been omitted and only those chapters which are of universal interest to the public included. In this form, the book should induce many former readers to read it again and bring to its perusal a host of new ones.

The story of his life as told by himself in this volume is as thrilling as any of his scientific discoveries, and is a revelation of one of the most charming and kindly personalities of the twentieth century.

Pupin was born in Yugoslavia, October 4, 1858, and in his book he tells us how he had to lie out in the pastures all night and watch the cattle. His parents were peasants who could not read nor write, but a passion for learning possessed the little boy. He arrived in New York as an immigrant with 5 cents in his pocket and a piece of an apple—his total assets. How astounding that the ignorant little shepherd boy became the president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science. He received honorary degrees from American and foreign universities, and the list of his decorations and honors would fill a column.

• • • •

His character was marked by simplicity, modesty and above all by loving kindness. I knew him well, and it was impossible to talk five minutes with him without somehow feeling his radiant benevolence.

Prof. Pupin was a sincere Christian, who said that the deeper he went into scientific research the brighter his religious faith became, and the stronger his belief in the immortality of the soul. He said the divine intelligence resides "in the soul of man. In that great world within us divinity resides. It seems to me that the soul is the greatest thing in the whole universe—the highest purpose of God's creative energy."

As his discoveries were largely in the field of light, we may now hope that as he progressed from immigrant to inventor, so he has now progressed from the darkness of earth to the world of light.

When Uncle Sam Drafts the Munitions Men.

("Under one of the bills put before Congress this year owners and officials of munitions and equipment plants would be drafted and required to run their plants as members of the army."—News item.)

Walt Smith, head of the local gun shop, was drafted today. Walt was found in perfect health and immediately given a uniform and ordered to return to his shop and run things with Government interference.

Chick Barber, general superintendent of the Nonsuch Powder Corporation, was before the draft board yesterday. Chick is claiming exemption on three grounds:

(b)—Bad feet.
(c)—Dependents.

"I've got a board of directors and 3,500 stockholders to support," said Chick, in explaining.

Lew Martin, founder of the local airplane works, is still on the job running things efficiently and at high speed, but doesn't know how long this can go on, as he expects to be called in the draft and put under orders of some politician any minute.

All departments of the Peerless Hand Grenade Factory have been reduced to half time, owing to the fact the officers and foremen have been obliged to spend most of their time before the local draft boards explaining how much they get a week and whether they don't think it's unpatriotic to run a business as if it were a business.

Warren & Monk's big steel helmet factory has been closed down, owing to inability to operate it. It seems that due to some Government confusion all the trained heads of the business, when drafted last week, were sent to an army camp by mistake. A company of men from the army quartermaster's service were sent to run the Warren & Monk plant.

Six chief engineers at the National Tank plant were courtmartialed and shot yesterday. They refused to manufacture tanks, as called for in quaint blueprints drawn by a prominent politician, and two well-known soap box orators and a magazine economist.

This planet itsn't what it was—
It looks a wreck to me;
There's chaos seen on every side—
Odd are the things I see.
Of late I thought that I perceived
A silver lining sweet,
But then I saw this headline big:
"JONES TWENTY-FIFTH IN MEET!"

I'd sort of hoped that normalcy
Was sneaking back once more;
It seemed that topsy-turvydom
Was being shown the door;
I thought, "This cockeyed stuff is done—
It's had its time at bat."
Then came the news, "Jones twenty-fifth"—
And in a tie, at that!

Put out the lights and drop the shades,
I'm going back to bed;
I'll pull the bedclothes eagerly
Above my groggy head;
Five years I've stood the crazy scene,
But this I say to you:
When I must read far down the list,
To find R. Jones I'm through!

Attitude Of England Holds Key To Stresa

One Certainty That Abyssinian Plaints Will Receive Little Attention From League.

By Stephane Botchev.
Special Correspondence of The Post.

Geneva.

THE decision to be made at the meeting of the British, French and Italian premiers at Stresa, as well as the decision which the League Council makes in regard to the French complaint against German rearmament, will indicate clearly the orientation of European politics for a long period in the future. Should the three conferring states agree on an Eastern pact with mutual military assistance, and should the League of Nations condemn Hitler's move of March 16, Germany will be isolated outside the European concert. Its return to the league would then be postponed for a long time, perhaps for ever.

Such are the tremendous stakes of the game to be played at Stresa. And nobody at Geneva has any doubt as to the factor which is destined to play the principal role at that meeting. The key to the situation is the conduct of England. It depends on England whether the isolation and encirclement of Germany will be encouraged, or whether Europe will continue the attempts to calm the restive Hitler Reich. It depends on England whether the Council of the League of Nations, which meets in Geneva on April 15, will make a decision excluding all possibility of Germany's return to the league, or whether it will merely listen to a few ineffectual speeches, then burying the affair in a commission of inquiry.

Thus, the manifestations of English policy and of public opinion in that country are of primary interest and are followed in Europe with the closest attention. And one must remark that the evolution of English opinion in the last few weeks has been none too favorable to Germany. Before the visit of Sir John Simon and Mr. Eden to Berlin the French feared eventual vacillations on the part of Sir John. But when the first news of the turn of the conversations and of the impressive demands which Hitler had set forth began to arrive from Berlin, they sighed with relief at the Quai d'Orsay.

• • • •

AT the same time French opinion began to note with pleasure the reaction of the British press against the intransigent attitude of Herr Hitler. The danger of an Anglo-German compromise was receding. Besides, Eden's visit to Moscow, which was marked by extreme cordiality, has brought about a very appreciable raprochement between England and the U. S. S. R. The eastern pact has thus taken on a new lease of life. Its English opponents, centering about Lord Lothian (the former Philip Kerr) and Sir John Simon, who would prefer not to isolate Germany by a too rigid, inacceptable agreement, have to some extent lost ground.

In the second place there is the decision of the league's council, meeting the week after Stresa. Here one can not speak with much exactitude. Even the French themselves do not know exactly what they want. It is believed here that the one thing which impelled them to lodge their complaint at Geneva was the desire to prevent Hitler's abrupt return to the league—and naturally also the necessity of reacting in some way so as to satisfy French public opinion.

As soon as the complaint came to Geneva it was understood that the French government wished to reserve complete liberty of action, for it invoked only article 11, which is of a very general character. It is certainly as a result of the very strong reaction of a large section of the English press, and of Sir John Simon himself, against an express condemnation of Germany at Geneva that the French took this irresolute attitude. And one must admit that in spite of all that German clumsiness may have done to compromise Germany's own position, there will be counsels of prudence and moderation at Stresa.

• • • •

ONE is permitted, however, to wonder how far those counsels will be followed. There is a certain difference of opinion between Foreign Minister Laval and Premier Flandin on the subject of foreign policy, which the latter desires to see more determined and decisive. It is said in Geneva that it was Flandin who influenced Laval to agree to go to Moscow, and that it was he who urged that Laval go there at the same time as the English to Berlin—a move to which Laval was opposed.

It is also affirmed that the moderation of the French complaint and the postponement of the council meeting are principally due to Laval's objection to the brusque, rapid action desired by Flandin. It appears that Flandin might be willing to act in opposition to England under certain circumstances, while Laval is anxious to keep permanent contact with the British government and is afraid of angering England by unilateral action. One must take account of these differences between the two ministers, which may reappear in the coming debates at Stresa and Geneva.

Most important of the other questions to be discussed at Stresa is the Austrian problem. The three states will have to confirm their intention of maintaining Austrian independence, and decide on the form of its guaranty, in view of the fact that Germany hestitates to accede to a central European pact such as was projected in Rome and London after Laval's visit in January and February. They will especially examine the question of the reconstruction of the Austrian military forces, as well as the abrogation of the treaty clauses which disarm Bulgaria and Hungary. The latter will certainly find difficulty in the way of obtaining legal equality in military matters, considering the demands of security guarantees formulated by its neighbors of the Little Entente.

CERTAIN circles in Geneva are agitating for league intervention to revise the military clauses of the peace treaties disarming these countries unilaterally. The advocates of this idea suggest that the assembly should apply article 19 of the covenant, which provides that the Assembly may advise the reconsideration by members of the league of treaties which have become inapplicable. It is pointed out that the application of article 19 would show that the league is not a mere keeper of the peace but also an instrument which permits pacific evolution and the modification of treaties and international situations in conformity with changing conditions.

There is certainly one thing which will not receive much attention at Stresa. That is the military action of Italy in Abyssinia. The Ethiopian delegate has asked the secretary-general to place the matter before the Council on the day when the latter meets to examine the French complaint against Germany. However, it is rather improbable that Abyssinia can succeed, by action before the league, in preventing Italy from carrying out its plans. In Geneva, and in Europe in general, people are thinking of anything save creating new difficulties. The question of European peace takes precedence over that of the independence of the Ethiopians. As usual, when the great quarrel, the little ones foot the bill.

County Group to Report on Post Spelling Bee Arrangements.

John White, Prince Georges County delegate to the Maryland Legislature, will explain his "teacher's" oath bill to the county Parent-Teacher Association Federation tonight at Maryland Park High School.

If the constitution is changed, the organization will immediately receive nominations for office. So far, the only person who has signified his intention to run is Mr. Day, who will seek re-election.

Wave of a Hand (The Mayor's!) Halts Trolleys

Main Street Chasm Drives Rockville Chief to Direct Action.

Dusk was spreading its calming hand over the lazy town of Rockville last night when tall sandy-haired Mayor Douglas M. Blandford stepped into the street.

A Capital Transit trolley car was clanging along Montgomery avenue, just half a block east of the county courthouse. In front of it, the mayor stopped. He held up his hand, warningly.

The motorman halted, shouted angrily and rushed out of the car.

"I am the Mayor of Rockville," Blandford placidly told him. "You can't go on. You'll have to turn back."

Calmly the mayor told the motorman he had decided that a gaping hole just next to the street car track—a miniature chasm, 3 feet wide and a foot deep, would make it dangerous for the trolley to proceed.

The track might cave in, he said. He demanded that the Capital Transit Co. repair it and, until it did, he went on, no trolleys could proceed.

A Maryland State trooper, J. R. Miller, saw the hole yesterday afternoon and notified county police that it was a traffic hazard. The county police notified Blandford, who called up the Capital Transit Co.'s maintenance department and asked that it be repaired.

He said later that the company had refused, arguing that the town should repair the hole. Then, he said, he decided on direct action.

After the mayor had halted two trolley cars, forcing both to go back to Washington, he decided to order the town roads department to fix the hole, billing the car line later. Last night, roads men were busy filling it in.

Nice Veto Faces Tax for Library In Hyattsville

Governor Reveals Several Measures He Intends to Turn Down.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 11.—At the close of a series of hearings on bills enacted by the General Assembly, Gov. Nice announced several measures he plans to veto, including one Montgomery County bill, and another for Prince Georges County. They are:

Providing for the repeal of the Montgomery County trapping law.

Reqiring the mayor and council of Hyattsville to levy a tax of from 5 to 7 cents for maintenance of the town library.

Allowing the sheriff of Calvert County an appearance fee of $3 in each case before a police justice.

Creating a police magistrate for Calvert County with civil jurisdiction in cases involving up to $250.

Dr. R. V. Truitt, professor of zoology at the University of Maryland, and director of the Chesapeake Biological Laboratory at Solomons Island, asked the Governor to veto the measure directing the conservation commissioner to release $1,500 worth of sponge crabs in waters of Somerset County. Dr. Truitt told the Governor that because of the greater salinity of the ocean water where the sponge crabs breed, young crabs would die in the more brackish waters of the county. The bill was sponsored by Senator Harry T. Phoebus, of Somerset County.

It is likely, authorities said, that the letters will be compared with the handwriting of the principals in the case in which Mrs. Anne Lyddane and three Washingtonians are charged with conspiracy to murder Mrs. Lyddane's husband, Francis.

Also alleged to have been marked for murder was Mrs. Beale, who named Mrs. Lyddane as corespondent in a divorce suit instituted several years ago. The suit later was dropped.

Meanwhile it was announced that counsel for the pretty Rockville bank secretary has expressed willingness to permit Montgomery County police to examine the bank account of which Mrs. Lyddane is guardian.

AN additional survey yesterday afternoon on the attitude of Government employes attending George Washington University on the strike against war and Fascism, scheduled for 11 a. m. and 6 p. m. today, revealed the same proportion of sentiment against the strike as was reported in this column yesterday morning.

In a previous article we gave excerpts of statements from scores of employe-students opposing the strike, on the ground it is being promoted by Communists, is undermining our national defenses, is un-American, nonpatriotic and is not necessary because America is not a war-like nation. The following statements are from employe-students who favor the strike and who have vigorously denied being communistically inclined.

Charles Kiefer, Supply Division, Agriculture, said:

"I am deeply appreciative to the Diary for this opportunity to express my views on the Student Strike Against War set for April 12.

"It is indeed, unfortunate that the impression was given in yesterday's Diary that the student strike is 'communistically hatched,' and 'a move to breed civil war.' Such is not the case. There are those students who believe with Senator Nye that 'the time is come when those who profess an aversion to war must openly indorse drastic action to prevent it.' We who support the strike refuse to be labeled as Communistic or un-American because we are attempting to focus public attention on the present war danger, and to build up an effective antiwar sentiment in this country. The 'red scare' is always hurled at those persons who take clear-cut stands on vital issues of interest to all of our citizens.

"The debate at G. W. on the strike aided in crystalizing student opinion against war, even though opposition was expressed to the strike. In this, the strike has accomplished part of its objective. There are many students in the Government service, I am sure, who favor the strike and who would be glad to be quoted through the Diary.

"As an afterthought I recall very seriously signing the 'oath of office.'

"CHARLES F. KIEFER, JR."

Arthur Erickson, Office of the Secretary, Agriculture, said:

"I personally feel that the strike could be very effective, but that the word 'strike' should not give an impression of violence, or that its participants are communistically inclined."

Several Federal workers said last night they would not walk out today because they could not afford the class cuts that will be registered for absence.

A. E. Giegengack, U. S. Public Printer, was one of the judges in this year's contest for the Francis Wayland Ayer Cup, which is awarded annually to an American newspaper for typographical excellence, and for which the 1935 winner, The New York Times, was announced yesterday.

SEVERAL members of Agriculture Department are attending the thirteenth annual convention of the Izaak Walton League of America, which is being held in Chicago. Speakers on the program include J. N. (Ding) Darling, chief, Bureau of Biological Survey, and H. H. Bennett, director, Soil Erosion Service.

Col. H. P. Sheldon, Dr. W. B. Bell, Frederick C. Lincoln and Clarence Cottam, all from Biological Survey, also are in attendance. Secretary Henry A. Wallace will participate in the program by a radio address from Washington today at 12:30 p. m. His subject will be "The Conservation of Wild-Life Resources."

Three Retirements Listed.

Three employes with from 15 to 31 years' service will be retired from Government Printing Office April 30, it is announced by H. H. Wright (F), chief clerk. They are, with addresses, positions and length of service:

Henry R. St. Cyr, chief fiscal officer, Soil Erosion Service, Interior, has been taken to his home from a Washington hospital, where he was confined more than a month after a heart attack.

Ruderman Is Honored.

Celebrating his twenty-sixth anniversary in Government service, in which he began as an assistant map printer at the munificent salary of 75 cents a day and advanced to his present position of property clerk of the Bureau of Air Commerce, Arthur Ruderman (F), is receiving the congratulations of his co-workers.

Mr. Ruderman's career started in the Geological Survey, where he remained five years. He was transferred to Commerce Department, where he gained his experience as property clerk. When the Bureau of Aeronautics was organized in 1926 he was part of what has now become the Bureau of Air Commerce. His service in the bureau has been continuous, except for the World War period, when he served as a sergeant in the Signal Corps, being placed in charge of the Photostat and Blueprint Department.

Mr. Ruderman's hobby for the last 18 years has been directing amateur contests in Washington theaters.

School Site Purchase Assailed as Unwise

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Westminster, Md., April 11.—Terming the purchase of the Blue Ridge College property for use as a combined high school and elementary school for New Windsor, Carroll County, as "unwise and uneconomical," a letter to the board of education from the State architect and State superintendent of schools indicates that under the terms of a bill passed by the State Legislature a modern school building will be erected at New Windsor in 1937. Thebill provided for new schools at Westminster and Mount Airy.

In the opinion of the State architect and State superintendent, the cost of remodeling the college would be about two-thirds as much as the purchase price of the property, offered for $60,000. According to the State officials an expenditure of approximately $70,000 would provide a modern school for the town.

Rollins said today, however, that the Pennsylvania police had gone back to Lancaster and that there were "no developments" to be reported here.

Mrs. Lawson disappeared February 27, and Dr. Zimmerly, 67-year-old country physician, has admitted she came to his "hospital" in Pennsylvania, but insists he took her to Lancaster on March 16 and has not seen her since. Zimmerly also is charged on four narcotics counts.

SEE YOU TOMORROW AT BREAKFAST
CALIFORNIA
NEW YORK

This is a fast age in which we live. You can fly from New York to California in less time than it takes to get out of a Pennsylvania avenue traffic jam; and they're streamlining the refrigerators and bath tubs. Things happen so quickly that movie stars look up a good divorce attorney before they announce their engagements.

Because of this 1935 speed, most people have a hard time keeping up with the news. If we fail to read what Huey Long says on Monday we can't understand what Gen. Johnson means on Tuesday; and if we miss an installment of the European war mystery we are puzzled when Hitler arrests another spy. Only last month, we recall, Barbara Hutton was buying her prince another polo pony, and now here she is in Reno, practically divorced! Excellent though they may be, daily news accounts can not keep you informed about everything, because they can not "tie in" the story with other events.

But The Washington Post is now taking care of all that. We've fixed things so that even if you're stranded in Little America or Baltimore for a week you can spend half an hour reading "The News of the Week" in The Sunday Post and become an authority on what happened at the Cabinet meeting on Tuesday, the Moscow conference on Wednesday, or the Horse Show on Friday. This news review, which you'll find every Sunday on the first two pages of the Special Articles Section, gives you a complete, concise, intelligent and interesting resume of everything that happened during the week, from the scheme to end the depression by having us take in each other's washing to the plan for insuring world peace by doubling the number of battleships and giving gas masks free with five gallons of gasoline. And "The News of the Week" is better than any magazine "review" because its news is still fresh, covering the week from Saturday to Saturday.

Sidney Olson, who weaves scattered news-threads into a complete historical tapestry, has to read 50 newspaper files, 20 magazines, 10 or 11 books and a Sears-Roebuck mail order catalog each week to know what's going on and why so that he can compress voluminous reports into the brief, bright "News of the Week" accounts. For instance, sometimes he must read 10,000 words to gain material for a 50-word story—but that story is complete. He does a swell job of it, too, and "News of the Week" is now by far the most popular feature in that feature-studded Sunday newspaper,

The Washington Post.

Hearing Seeks Data on Mellon Bank Holdings

U. S. Contends He Owned $10,000,000 in Stocks While in Cabinet.

By the Associated Press.

Pittsburgh, April 11.—The Board of Tax Appeals hearing Andrew W. Mellon's income tax case moved today to speed up the case, now in its eighth week.

Through a $14,000 item in its $3,069,000 tax bill to the financier, the Government was attempting to show by its first witness that he owned $10,000,000 worth of bank stock in 1932—contending he had owned it also during the 11 years he was Secretary of the Treasury.

Fred R. Shearer, Government counsel, was having George Asplund, a bookkeeper, trace the 24 bank stocks through the books of R. B. Mellon, who had taken them when his brother went into President Harding's Cabinet.

Charles M. Trammel, one of the three board members hearing the case, interrupted to ask:

"Would it not be practicable to submit your statement there to counsel and let counsel check it over and endeavor in some way to save all of this item-by-item examination?"

Hogan Submits Proposal.

Frank J. Hogan, counsel for Mellon, interjected:

"Our position is that every single solitary thing that has been adduced from these books could be stipulated. * * * Why can not the bookkeepers make up a statement, such as we have repeatedly offered to stipulate and which I will sign my name to in blank and let them put them into evidence?"

Shearer replied:

"I will state to your honors that based upon the experience of counsel for the respondent for the last six months, most of which preceded any contract with Mr. Hogan, I had not conceived that these items were subject to stipulation."

He completed his examination of the witness and then the board and counsel for each side went into a closed session to devise ways and means of "getting out of the trenches by Christmas" as one of the conferees explained it.

Mellon in March, 1921, turned over stocks in 24 banks to his brother under a contract stipulating that R. B. owed him $10,520,495 at 5 1-3 per cent interest.

On June 20, 1930, when Paul Mellon, son of the financier, assumed the indebtedness, the evidence shows it stood at $10,791,355—although the interest rate had been increased in the meantime to 8 per cent and R. B., had paid $370,000 additional "in full settlement of interest."

Shearer brought out from Asplund that R. B. Mellon actually paid to his brother as "interest" every cent of dividends paid by the bank and that the $270,860 additional on the original contract represented additional stock acquired by him through stock dividends and exercise of stock purchase rights.

Shearer was leading up to his contention that in 1931 when the banks paid $804,000 in dividends to Paul Mellon, his father was the actual owner of the stocks and therefore should have reported that sum in his income-tax report.

A. W. Mellon was paid $755,000 "interest" in that year by Paul, and reported this as income. The $47,000 difference, after deducting approximately $2,000 for certain losses, the Government has included in its tax "bill" as income. With 50 per cent penalty for alleged fraud the tax amounts to approximately $14,000.

Alyce, a Normal Girl Now, Hints of Many Boy Friends

Upside-Down Girl Wants to Be an Actress, Artist or Nurse.

Copyright, 1935, by the United Press.

Fall River, Mass., April 11.—Alyce Jane McHenry, Omaha's 10-year-old upside-down stomach girl, thinks "it's wonderful to have my tummy right side up again."

Perched on a piano stool in the nurses' home at Trusdale Hospital, interspersing her remarks with tuneless trills of the keys, she told of the surgical adventure that made her a normal child, and of her plans for the future.

"I wasn't afraid," said Alyce. "Patty Lou—that's my favorite doll—is taking my place in bed. She's sick. But I'm well now."

If, as has been suggested, Alyce goes into the movies, Hollywood will find her a very pretty child, with light-brown hair, flashing blue eyes, an oval face that even now has lost its hospital pallor, and a musical voice.

As soon as she had seated herself on the piano stool, she pulled off one shoe. Then she turned to her secretary and said, "Play my favorite, 'The Isle of Capri.'"

Mrs. Knowlton obliged, and Alyce sang the song.

"You must have a lot of boy friends, Alyce," the reported suggested. "How many letters do you write to them?"

Alyce blushed. "Well, which one?"

As for her favorite movie stars, she said:

"For kids I like Shirley Temple, but for grown-ups I like Dick Powell, Ruby Keeler, Jean Harlow and Ginger Rogers."

"What are your ambitions?"

"Well, I'd like to be a nurse or an actress or an artist, but—I might end up working in a mill."

The operation was performed by Dr. M. I. Kuslik, who described it to the Leningrad Surgeons Society today. He said results of the operation were gratifying; the patient can bend his new grafted "forefinger" at will. The second toe of one of the patient's feet was transplanted to his right hand.

Share-Wealth Project Draws Wallace's Fire

'Share Responsibilities' Is Suggested as Slogan; Warns of Foes.

Louisville, Ky., April 11.—Secretary of Agriculture Henry A. Wallace, criticizing share-the-wealth plans, told Kentucky school teachers here today that "we must have more things to be divided, rather than continue quarreling about dividing up what we have."

Suggesting "share our responsibilities" as a slogan, Wallace said sharing the wealth would not solve the problem of poverty.

"The national income can be increased to $135,000,000,000 a year instead of $80,000,000,000 as it was in 1929," he said. "That is the way to get an increased standard of living for the farmer."

Defending the upward trend of food prices, Wallace said they were not out of line when compared with the prewar level.

After his address to the Kentucky Education Association, Wallace spoke to a meeting of county tobacco control committees from Kentucky and six other tobacco-growing States, urging a united stand for continuance of the processing tax.

Terming this tax "the farmer's tariff," Wallace said it was being attacked now particularly by the meat packers and cotton spinners. He predicted that New Deal policies will be subjected to a more determined attack next year and that it will be "the meanest, dirtiest, bitterest kind of fight you ever saw." The processing tax, he said, will be among the "prominent things" attacked.

He declared it was necessary for producers of all commodities to stand together, adding that "if we get separated, we'll be massacred."

Cuba Questions 4 in Kidnaping For $300,000

14 Others Released; One of 2 Women Linked to Ransom Bills.

By the Associated Press.

Havana, April 11.—Police today maintained the closest secrecy in investigating the kidnaping of the wealthy young Eutimio Falla Bonet, released after a payment of $300,000.

All but four suspects were released. Eighteen, including two women, had been taken for questioning.

Police officials said there was no evidence connecting the kidnaping with radical political groups, although other members of the government expressed a contrary view.

Falla, son of the late Laureano Falla Guttierrez, millionaire sugar man, told friends last week that two automobiles blocked the path of his machine in the fashionable Vedado district Tuesday afternoon. Several men seized him and he was held in a house nearby until the ransom, the largest ever paid in Cuba, was arranged. He was held in the house all night.

About $20,000 of the ransom money has been recovered. One of the women held, police said, had rented the house where Falla was captive and the other woman posed as her maid. One of them, Isolina Castro, had a $100 bill in her possession when she was arrested. She told police she drew the money from a Boston bank.

Another suspect, Jose Vasquez, was accused of possessing seven $100 bills, the serial numbers of which corresponded with some of the ransom cash.

Missing Boy's Father Fears Child Is Dead

Denies Receiving Ransom Note; Police Intensify Hunt for 'Thin Man.'

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, April 11.—The father of Richard Max Perrot, 4-year-old mute lad who has been missing for a week, expressed the fear his son was dead today.

"I am afraid that pretty soon they will find him dead," the father, Max Perrot, stated, "maybe in the river."

But Perrot's despair and his contradiction of previous statements that he had received a ransom demand for the return of his boy only resulted in increased activity on the part of authorities. A report by Mr. and Mrs. Ray Thompson that they had seen a "shabby man" and a "very tired little boy" entering the forest reserve near suburban Des Plaines last Sunday caused Clayton F. Smith, president of the county board, to launch an intensive hunt in that heavily wooded district.

Smith ordered the 6 superintendents and 125 forest reserve employes to comb their precincts. Twenty-five motorcycle officers and a score of policemen were furnished with a description of the mysterious "thin man" who lured the lad from his home last Thursday.

Perrot contradicted intimations that he had received a ransom demand from young Richard's captor. He explained that what he had meant to make clear was that if he did get a ransom ultimatum and could afford to meet it he would gladly do so.

"I said yesterday that I was sure my boy was alive because I felt that way then," he asserted. "Now I don't. There was never any word from any kidnaper. Even if I had got a ransom note, I wouldn't tell anybody. It would be dangerous."

His assertions confused authorities. But they did not discard a theory that Perrot may have heard from the "thin man" and had been warned against talking. They also considered the possibility the child had been lured away—perhaps slain—by a degenerate and that some opportunist had demanded money on the pretext he could produce the boy.

Insurance Case Jury Disagrees on Maiming

Roanoke, Va., April 11 (AP).—After deliberating nearly four hours, a hustings court jury that spent more than three days hearing the case of Jesse T. Meadows, who brought suit against the New York Life Insurance Co. to force payment of disability benefits for the loss of his hand and foot, was unable to decide today whether Meadows lost the members accidentally or intentionally, and was discharged by Judge J. L. Almond, jr.

This was the second trial of the suit, the first jury having been unable to agree. A third trial is anticipated.

"SELLING-TALK" BARRED AT NATION'S CAPITOL

U. S. experts buy gasoline on scientific tests . . . a hint to you

TEST GOING ON!

The Government isn't listening to sales talk

No sir, the Government finds out for itself, by real scientific tests, the difference between gasolines.

It has two different sets of specifications. One is for ordinary gasoline use. The other, a much more rigid test, is for motor fuel for emergency vehicles.

You will be glad to learn this

You can drive around the corner and actually buy a gasoline for your car that more than meets the U. S. Government requirements for its fire-engines, ambulances and emergency vehicles. At regular prices, too.

It's Texaco Fire-Chief.

CONTAINS LEAD
TEXACO FIRE-CHIEF GASOLINE

Ends gasoline guesswork

You buy a lot of gasoline in a year. Plenty! It's worth thinking about. You want all there is in quick starts, pull and power.

What better guide have you than your own Government?

TEXACO FIRE-CHIEF

When you buy at this pump you will be getting, at no extra cost, a gasoline that more than meets the Government's requirements* for fire-engines and ambulances

Magic to Reign All Next Week At Heigh-Ho

'Christopher' Will Mystify Patrons and Predict Their Fate.

By Kay Ware.

One side of the post card bore a photograph of Baltimore's Lord Baltimore Hotel. The other side bore the message, "Open at the Heigh-Ho Monday, May 15. Playing here at the present. Thaumaturgically, Christopher-magician."

Verification by phone resulted in the following: "Melbourne Christopher? Yes. No. He'll be here next week, not April 15. Oh, excuse me, next week is the fifteenth."

A few footnotes: Christopher is a collegiate-looking youngster who ties and unties ropes and will read your mind if you let him. "Thaumaturgically" means "magically" or something, and if you're interested he'll reel off any number of terms that mean the same thing. Be sure, if you see him at Heigh-Ho next week, to ask him to your table for some of those mind-reading tricks. They really mystify.

Gracie Barrie came to see old friend Peter Macias the other night. Enters and Borgiado, a novel number called "Gnossiene." A double piano and celeste team between dances bring applause.

Childs Gingham Club opens a new show today, to be presented four times Saturday and three times on other days. Chaney and Harley are novelty dancers, Dinora trips light fantastics in Spanish style, Lou Henrique is mistress of ceremonies. Jimmy Santmeyer's music is always sweet for dancers; Mary Jo Hamilton and Sammy Richardson do vocals, and Joe Wubbold, the drummer, is not to be outdone—he sings and pounds at the same time.

Three "lucky numbers" are billed at the Madrillon this week. They are Dancer Florence Barlow, with vivid bits and a "French Doll Dance." Singer June Carrol, also from New York, goes in for comedy, and Dancer Lorraine Chavalier shows you new things along contortion lines.

Last night there were gay times up at Peter Borras' place. Mr. and Mrs. Leon Brusiloff played host and hostess to their young nephew, one Alvin Sperling, who was 14 years old.

La Paree exhibits a bit of opera this week with "La Ballet des Heures," from "La Gioconda." The dance portrays morning, noon and night, with the sun and moon danced by Bill Behney and Ginger Harris, respectively. Other good features: Hollywood Hotel number, led by Kitty Wagner, and Indian adagio dance.

Magician and His Shadow

Things to know about the Shoreham show: To quote Ed Sullivan, Broadway columnist: "The best of the London invaders, the Prince of Wales' pet warbler, now here, is Eddie Collis." . . . Marshall and Inez in musical comedy and British satire bits. Note the size of the bow on the lady's head . . . Marcia Harris, English born, dances with twin tambourine and a la Mata Hari . . . Aida Luciano, in a red velvet gown, goes gypsy and gives you a Spanish waltz . . .

Hit tunes from "Go Into Your Dance" will be here soon at the Willard's Bamboo Room. Appropriate that Ernestine Gardner should sing them, since she resembles Ruby Keeler—you remember?

Since the opening of the Mayflower's lounge, there has been a feature which has proved popular with the guests. It is the supper snacks which are served in the lounge during the 10-till-1 dance session.

Nicholas Marchitelli, renowned for his culinary masterpieces, is the man who is responsible for the snacks. They are especially devised to give just the right amount and kind of food desired late at night.

Many Washingtonians have adopted the New York idea, that of eating rather lightly before going to the theater and following it with a heartier meal. You might try the stunt before and after the movies.

Maryland Club Garden notes—Society ballroom team of Luis and Pegi Harper in tangoes and waltzes . . . Sally Winston singing sophisticated songs . . . Charley Mayer the master of ceremonies and barytone, and Fran Trappe, accordionist. Music is supplied by Al Barkley and his ten-piece band. Ernest, the perfect bartender, ready to mix your favorite in front of your very eyes at the crystal bar.

POLLY ARMELL, who greets you at Child's Gingham Club.

A new orchestra at the Jockey Club . . . Bob Wintree's Collegian Entertainers—Buddy Weaver, steel guitar specialist; Harmony Trio—Frannie Grady, Phil Fisher and Bob Winfree, and Lorraine Flammer, tap dancer. Barbara Leigh, personality and blues songs, is also the hostess.

Broadway + + By Ed. Sullivan

New York, April 11.

SOPHIE TUCKER, who is 51 years YOUNG, stands in a Broadway night club every night and sings "Life Begins at 40" . . . It is, as I reported from Florida, the tenderest thing I've ever heard and it must be soothing to those veterans who think they are saddled down with too many years and too many gray hairs . . . It is nice to watch the mothers and dads, who sit at the ringside, while she sings this tune . . . You can see white-haired men turning and whispering to white-haired women and as the song progresses, you can see the lines vanish from their faces . . . "Life Begins at 40" is a cheering note in a world that is impatient with those who are not in their 20's.

• • • •

A survey of Broadway and Hollywood proves that the song is truer than you realize . . . Jack Benny, at 40, is the No. 1 comic of the air . . . Eddie Cantor, the greatest box office draw of all, is 42 . . . Paul Muni is 40 . . . Paul Whiteman is 44 . . . Leslie Howard is 42 . . . Jimmy Durante is 42 . . . Fanny Brice is 44 . . . Ina Claire is 43 . . . Ed Wynn is 49 . . . Alfred Lunt is 42 . . . Maurice Chevalier is 43 . . . Al Jolson is 49 . . . Sam Goldwyn is 48 . . . N. T. G. is 42 . . . Richard Barthelmess is 42 . . . Alice Brady is 43 . . . Roland Colman is 44 . . . Ruth Chatterton is 42 . . . Wallace Beery is 47 . . . Fred Allen is 40 . . . Conceding that some of these have falsified their ages for professional reasons, the fact remains that here is definite proof that life at 40 has vigor and force and tremendous sweep.

Lynn Fontanne at 53 . . . Sophie Tucker at 51 . . . W. C. Fields at 50 . . . Cecil DeMille at 53 . . . Doug Fairbanks at 51 . . . Lionel Barrymore at 57 . . . Victor Moore at 59 . . . Charlie Winninger at 51 . . . Mary Boland at 56 . . . George Bancroft at 52 . . . George Arliss at 67 . . . A. E. Matthews at 66 . . . These suggest that the song should be switched to read, "Life begins at 50" . . . At any event, the recital of these ages must be comforting to those who are in the next division, the 30-brackets . . . Charles Laughton, at 36, has 14 years at least ahead of him . . . Ditto Beatrice Lillie, who is 37. Judith Anderson, 38 . . . Helen Morgan, 35 . . . Kay Francis, 36 . . . Clark Gable, 34 . . . Gary Cooper, 34 . . . Helen Hayes, 33 . . . Claudette Colbert, 30 . . . To these "babies" Sophie Tucker's song offers inspiration of sheerest type.

The Parkyerkarkas controversy, which has been stirring the Stem, and upon which I commented yesterday, promises to clear itself up in a hurry . . . George Givot yesterday claimed that he created the character of Gus Parkyerkarkas in 1932 in an M. G. M. short . . . Eddie Cantor apparently buries Givot for keeps in the following wire: "I have in my possession, and which you are at liberty to see at any time, concrete proof that Harry Einstein, now on my program, created the Greek character Parkyerkarkas in May, 1924. Did you ever sit in a no-limit poker game with a royal flush in your hand and watch the guy next to you bluffing? Ask me about it. Regards. (Signed) Eddie Cantor.

While we are unraveling controversies, let us take up a publicity memo sent out by the Yacht Club Boys and reading: "About 15 years ago the Yacht Club Boys had a young Italian boy as their pianist. He was a newcomer to show business, but they advised him to go out on his own—Jimmy Durante" . . . It is a nice story, but 15 years ago the Yacht Club Boys weren't making enough dough to hire a piano player . . . In fact, I never remember this combination using an outside piano player as one of the combination, George Walsh played the piano, Billy Mann played the violin, Kern played the guitar, and Chic Endor played the horses.

Ethiopian Soldiers To Study War Films

Addis Ababa, Ethiopia, April 11 (AP).—World War films depicting the French defense of Fort Verdun were adopted today as a medium of instruction for Ethiopian officers being trained by a Belgian military mission.

Chiefs of Emperor Haile Selassie departed for their provinces after having been warned by him to "be prepared for any eventuality." Although it was officially denied Ethiopian forces are being mobilized, it was known troops are quietly assembling on the frontier and tonight more fighting forces departed, apparently bound for the border.

Troop Threats Block Mexican Strike Spread

Cardenas Ready for Stern Measures; Walkout at Puebla Ended.

By the Associated Press.

Mexico City, April 11.—The government's vigorous attitude in the face of increasingly serious labor difficulties had immediate results today in the termination at noon of the general strike at Puebla.

Workers there returned to their activities, which were paralyzed for three days, but warned that the strike would be resumed if President Lazaro Cardenas failed to keep his promise to settle troubles at Atlixco's textile mills.

It was learned the government was prepared to use soldiers and police if necessary to prevent organization of a general revolutionary strike called for April 20. There were indications the government intends to employ sternest measures to prevent any strike spread.

Settlement of difficulties in Atlixco and Puebla would avert action planned by the General Confederation of Workers and Peasants, which claims more than 40,000 members. Similar strike action is threatened by other organizations.

The government, through decisions by the courts and labor board and actions by the president himself, was viewed in many quarters as eager to help the workers achieve "just rights," but the president also was seen as determined to end activities of allegedly unscrupulous labor leaders and to see that the fight is carried on with the constitution as its basis.

Silvano Barba Gonzalez, head of the labor department, said authorities, while recognizing the right to strike, can not permit any abuse of this constitutional guarantee.

Generally expressed opinion was that the government was forced to adopt this attitude to check ambitious efforts of radical leaders to prepare the way for a much talked about "dictatorship of the proletariat."

Roosevelt Faces Defeat, G.O.P. Leader Asserts

Norwalk, Ohio, April 11 (AP).—John Hamilton, Kansas Republican national committeeman, told a gathering of Ohio G. O. P. leaders here tonight "we do not need a third party to accomplish the defeat of Roosevelt" in 1936.

"President Roosevelt is following a course that appeals neither to the conservative nor to the radical," he said. "The inevitable result is a political issue in which his semi-socialistic Ship of State, with its Tammany rudder, has no place whatsoever."

Hamilton said if a third party "under the leadership of such men as Long, Coughlin and La Follette," should be actively in the field in 1936, "the fight will resolve itself into a campaign between the Republican Party and the new movement."

Reich Conscripts Tailors.

Berlin, April 11 (AP).—Germany's tailors were called to the front today to avoid a serious delay in military conscription when the first recruits are summoned next fall. More than 900 skilled tailors to make uniforms will be available within six months, labor front officials said.

'The Best Dog Is'—The Shetland

Next to an Elephant, the Sheep Dog Is the Most Intelligent of Animals, Says Sir Charles Ross, World Traveler, of His Pet.

"Next to an elephant, the Shetland sheepdog is the most intelligent animal that I know."

And that is no little praise for a breed when the statement is made by none other than Sir Charles Ross, of Ross rifle fame, world traveler and as charming a raconteur as this writer has met in many a day. A fine specimen of the Shetland or "Shelties," as this miniature collie is sometimes called, makes her home with the Scotsman at 1619 Massachusetts avenue.

The Shetland is seldom seen in this country. They are scarcely known outside of the island whose name they bear. The reason is—seasickness. Even intrepid world travelers seldom venture to visit the Shetland Island, and, for that reason, the dog is not seen or known.

Roughest Stretch of Sea.

"I've lived only 200 miles away from the Shetland Island," Sir Charles declared "but I have never been there. Nobody ever goes there unless they are driven to it. I'd rather go to Iceland. That belt of sea between Shetland and Scotland is the roughest on the globe, the tide running 10 knots an hour there. You are violently seasick and you have to be tied in your berth. Sometimes you have to wait three or four days before the boat will attempt to make the trip. That is why the Shetland sheepdog is very little known.

"They make wonderful pets, however," he continued. "They are a one-man dog in some respects. Since my housekeeper has been ill, Aasla here has never left her. You can tell what Aasla is going to do and what she is thinking about by her expression."

Aasla is, indeed, a beautiful and intelligent animal. Despite the fact that Sir Charles says "she is losing her figure," she is a dog to be noticed anywhere, with a beautiful sable and white coat. Her full name is Treevater Aasla and she is 3 years old. Sir Charles believes that the breed is not very far removed from a fox.

The Shetland Sheep Dog.

The Shetland sheep dog is approximately a show collie in miniature, the ideal height being from 12 to 15 inches. He is conspicuous because of his beautiful double coat, the outer one of long hair and the inner one short, soft and close. Mane and frill are abundant, fore legs well feathered, hind legs above the hocks profusely covered, but smooth below, with a smooth face.

The tail, another beauty of the breed, is long with a good brush of hair and carried down with an upward swirl at the tip. The usual colors are tricolor, black and tan, black and white and sable and white. He has a flat skull, tapering toward the eyes, with a long muzzle. His eyes are almond-shaped, set obliquely, and brown in color. His ears are small, placed high, carried semi-erect with tips forward. He has a lithe and graceful action and speed and jumping power great for his size. Despite his smallness, he is a working dog.

Survivors Reveal New Sea Mystery

Ship Sinks Off Jamaica With Loss of 11 Lives.

By the Associated Press.

Kingston, Jamaica, April 11.—Five members of the crew of the Norwegian freighter Havmoy came into Kingston today to tell how their ship foundered mysteriously off Jamaica Tuesday with the loss of most of its crew.

Late today fishermen reported picking up two more hungry, exhausted survivors, leaving the estimated toll at 11.

Fishermen found the five clinging to a raft on which they had drifted more than 48 hours. They were near death from hunger and exposure.

Since the 627-ton freighter went down, death had struck twice at the raft. Capt. Albert Knutsen, of Oslo, Norway, and the second engineer died just before the fishermen picked the survivors off the tossing raft.

School Children Fingerprinted.

Detroit, April 11 (AP).—The children of Grosse Point High School, on Detroit's "gold coast" of Lake St. Clair, are getting fingerprinted. In response to an offer of police officials to record the prints, parents of more than 500 children at the school took advantage of the plan to have the prints filed in the central bureau of identification at Washington.

G. A. Garrett And Bride To Live Here

By Evelyn Peyton Gordon.

And so Washington society bids farewell to another attractive bachelor and welcomes a most charming new hostess!

Yesterday evening at 6 o'clock Mrs. Ethel Shields Darlington, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Peter Shields, of Philadelphia, became the bride of Mr. George Angus Garrett, of Washington, in a simple ceremony which was performed at the home of the bride, High Lawn, in Sewickley Heights, Pa., by the Rev. Dr. Owen Davies Odell, pastor of the Sewickley Presbyterian Church.

The engagement of Mrs. Darlington and Mr. Garrett, one of Washington's most popular bachelors, was announced last week from Pittsburgh, where the bride, widow of Mr. Harry Darlington, jr., makes her home.

The bride was given in marriage by her son, Mr. Harry Darlington 3d, and Viscount Henri de Sibour, of Washington, was best man. The ceremony was attended by a number of friends and relatives of the bride from Pittsburgh and Sewickley, and those of the bridegroom from New York and Washington, and was followed by a small reception at the home of the bride.

Social Leader in Pittsburgh.

Mrs. Garrett has been prominent in social and philanthropic activities in Pittsburgh, having assumed the responsibilities of the late Mrs. Harry Darlington, who was among Pittsburgh's recognized social leaders until her death about ten years ago. Mrs. Garrett added her own interests to these inherited ones. She founded the Pittsburgh Junior League and was its president for several years.

Until she and Mr. Garrett return from their wedding trip to their home on New Hampshire avenue her children, Harry III, McCullough and Elaine Darlington, will remain at High Lawn, when they will come to Washington to live with their mother. Mr. and Mrs. Garrett left immediately after the wedding reception for New York, whence they will sail for an extended European trip.

Mr. Garrett is a partner in the firm of Harriman, Keech & Co. His marriage to the former Alice Vandergift was terminated by divorce a few years ago. His daughter, Miss Margot Garrett, a young girl who will shortly make her bow to society, is at school at North Foreland Lodge, in England, but spends much of her vacation time with her father in this country.

Mr. Garrett is a member of the Metropolitan Club, Chevy Chase and Grasslands Club, in Washington; the Knickerbocker, Racquet and Tennis, Turf and Field and the United Hunts, of New York.

Capital Guests Present.

Among the out-of-town guests who attended the ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. Persifor Frazer, of Philadelphia; Mr. and Mrs. George Sloane, of Warrenton, Va., and New York; Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Slater, jr., Mr. and Mrs. David K. E. Bruce, the latter formerly Miss Ailsa Mellon, and Mr. and Mrs. Hunter Marston, all of New York. From Washington went Baron Paul Schell, secretary of the Hungarian Legation, and Mr. Myron Hofer, as well as Viscount de Sibour, who acted as best man.

Two sisters of the bride, Mrs. Robert Clarkson, of New York, and Mrs. Alastair MacLean, of Inverness, Scotland, as well as her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Peter Shields, were also among the wedding guests.

The new Mrs. Garrett will be warmly welcomed when she arrives in Washington to take up her residence, for her circle of acquaintances and friends here is nearly as large as that of Mr. Garrett.

Women Choose Dark Blue for Office Wear

By Ruth Anne Davis.

A GREAT many working women have chosen dark blue suits and dresses this season because they realize they are smart and extremely practical. When they wish to brighten their ensemble a bit they wear a chamois-colored hat and carry a chamois purse perhaps. But for every day, for the trip from home to the office, out for luncheon at noon, they select dark blue accessories.

A certain large downtown store has a large assortment of extremely attractive dark blue bags which might be just what some business woman is looking for. These come in all styles, and several types of leather with smooth or dull finish.

The bags recommend themselves to the discriminating shopper for three reasons. In the first place, they cost only $1. In the second, they are all unusually attractive. And last, they are beautifully finished.

Sample Jackets at Bargain.

Here's the kind of thing you always hear about—after it's over. Some kind friend will go into raptures telling you the marvelous buy she happened on.

But ship ahoy! This time we're ahead of her and we can don our bonnets and hasten down to a local store where there's a sale "what is" a sale!

Sample jackets are selling today for $3.89! And you ought to see them! Chic, close-fitting little affairs in literally dozens of styles. Single-breasted, double-breasted, pleated back, etc. They come in tweeds, herringbones, flannels and mixtures, in brown, light and navy blue, black and red.

Don't miss the fun!

"April Showers" Gift.

"April Showers" is the intriguing name of an equally intriguing Easter offering. It consists of an egg-shaped cake of toilet soap delicately perfumed and a bottle of the same fragrance. The two together cost only $1.

They come in an attractive yellow box painted with pictures of Easter bunnies and spring flowers. The package, as well as the contents, make an ideal, inexpensive little remembrance.

Perfume-Mascara Combination.

Another charming Easter gift item, which is nice enough to treat yourself to, consists of a dainty lilac skin perfume, and a waterproof creamy mascara. These are presented in a striking white and silver box.

The mascara is really a gift on the house because ordinarily the perfume sells for the same price which both items together cost now. And—if you haven't had an introduction to this mascara you've missed a real pleasure. It is a creamy substance that not only darkens the lashes and brows but makes them soft and lustrous, and encourages an upward curl. But best of all, it neither runs nor cakes.

The lilac perfume is particularly popular this spring in line with the trend to the lighter fragrances. Besides being a delightfully refreshing scent, it is also a lotion rather than a full strength perfume. You may apply it all over you after a bath or use it as a facial astringent. Its subtle fragrance combined with its tonic effect on the skin makes it a special favorite.

Glove Prices Are Low.

Don't risk missing the exceptional sale of gloves in an F street store. Here you may buy cotton string gloves, cool and convenient for summer, for only 68 cents. They come in yellow, white, cream, beige, gray, brown, navy and black.

There are also some Bemberg gloves trimmed with soutache braid, or wrist strap and button in white, chamois, brown and navy. These are only 78 cents. At the same ridiculously low price are some mesh pull-ons, white with starched lace tops.

Washable doeskins which once sold for $1.65 are now $1.28. Those which were $1.95 are down to $1.68. These are available in wrist or six-button lengths.

Capeskin gloves, formerly $1.95 are $1.68. These are made of lightweight, fine supple skins and come in pull-on styles with tailored or perforated cuff.

New Knitting Cotton.

Knitting fans are waxing enthusiastic over the new "bumpy" cotton for summer knitwear. It's unusual. It's practical. And it's fun to work with.

Those with the knitting yen will find the "bumpy" cotton and lots of other knitting novelties in a delightfully cozy little knitting nook at—— Well, you call and we'll tell you!

Dresser Set Gift.

Husbands, sweethearts, brothers, uncles, or cousins who are looking for something to give "her" for Easter are apt to find a certain specially priced dresser set exactly what they want.

The set is made of a lovely lustrolette composition. It is smartly designed and comes in rose, maize or jade green. Besides the comb, brush and mirror there's a powder box, button hook, buffer file and shoe horn. Eight pieces for $4.45.

All Appetites Will Be Attracted By This Old-Fashioned Jelly Roll

If you have always been entranced with the swirling of sponge cake and jelly, known to the world as old-fashioned jelly roll, but never had the courage to attempt to make, your fears can be tossed aside, for below is a recipe as simple to follow as A B C.

Varied Menu With Jelly-Filled Cake for Sunday Supper Dessert.

By Dorothea Duncan.

EVEN the sophisticated young thing with an eye for her waistline forgets all about an 18-day diet when the old-fashioned jelly roll makes its appearance at the table. There is something about this swirling light sponge with its twisting of jelly that attracts the appetite of the old as well as the young. If you haven't decided on a Sunday night dessert, old-fashioned jelly roll is the answer. Make it like this:

Old-Fashioned Jelly Roll.

¾ cup sifted cake flour
¾ teaspoon double-acting baking powder or 1½ teaspoons ordinary baking powder
¼ teaspoon salt
4 eggs
¾ cup sifted sugar
1 teaspoon vanilla
1 cup jelly (any flavor).

Sift flour once; measure. Combine baking powder, salt and eggs in a bowl. Place over smaller bowl of hot water and beat with rotary egg beater, adding sugar gradually until mixture becomes thick and light-colored. Remove bowl from hot water. Fold in flour and vanilla. Turn into 15x10-inch pan which has been greased, lined with paper to within ½ inch of edge and again greased. Bake in a hot oven (400 degree F.) 13 minutes. Quickly cut off crisp edges of cake. Turn out on cloth covered with powdered sugar; remove paper. Spread with jelly and roll. Wrap in cloth and cool on rack.

Jump Trump Rebid.

No doubt, in the last few days, you have noticed some unusual bidding in the Sims-Culbertson match at the Crockford's Club. And those versed in the Culbertson System may feel the bidding does not run true to form. That will show they have not kept up with the changes in the system as outlined in the 1935 streamlined model.

It is most important to reach every possible slam, and one of the new ideas in our bidding method is the Jump-Trump Rebid, showing a solid or near-solid suit. For instance, in response to a two heart opening, partner bids two spades, indicating a fairly strong hand. At once a slam looms up. To show that the heart suit has not more than one missing honor, the opener will jump to four hearts.

This response conveys a volume of information, especially when partner holds an honor in the opening suit. Knowing there are no losers in hearts, the responding hand can use the conventional Four or Five Notrump call, assist the hearts, show another suit or rebid spades to show length, without setting the side beyond its depth.

"A Comedy of Errors."

In today's hand the contract is by no means a laydown, but declarer should have played it better. Had West been on his toes he would have scored 100 points instead of losing 1,430.

1—Rebidding the spades, since heart support can be shown later.

2—A fine bid. North can practically guarantee a slam opposite a hand containing a forcing rebid.

The Play.

West opened the club trey and East's Queen forced out declarer's Ace. The Jack of spades was led, followed by the Ace of diamonds and a diamond ruffed. The Ace and King of spades afforded a club discard, West ruffing the King.

Had West returned a trump at this point, declarer would have had no play for the contract. With any other return, however, a cross-ruff yields the rest of the tricks. West led the King of clubs, and declarer made the slam.

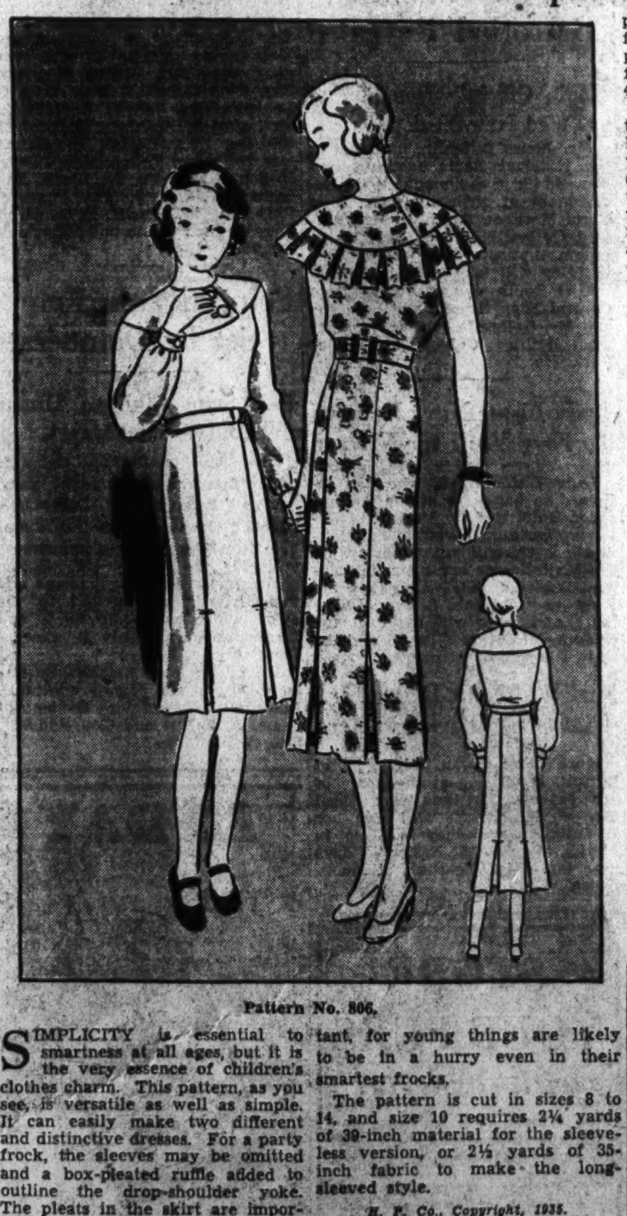
Pattern for Children's Frock Is Both Versatile and Simple



Pattern No. 806.

SIMPLICITY is essential to smartness at all ages, but it is the very essence of children's clothes charm. This pattern, as you see, is versatile as well as simple. It can easily make two different and distinctive dresses. For a party frock, the sleeves may be omitted and a box-pleated ruffle added to outline the drop-shoulder yoke. The pleats in the skirt are important, for young things are likely to be in a hurry even in their smartest frocks.

The pattern is cut in sizes 8 to 14, and size 10 requires 2¼ yards of 39-inch material for the sleeveless version, or 2½ yards of 35-inch fabric to make the long-sleeved style.

OBJECT—Not MATRIMONY

By LILLIAN BARKER.

On her eighteenth birthday, Katrina Harman learns that she has lost her fortune and that Tazewell Bronson, whom she loves, also loves her, but has no intention of marrying anyone. Ill-advisedly, she lets him pay for some frocks she has ordered and gives him her I. O. U. for them. She can not repay him and is determined not to see him again, although he tries to continue his attentions. After a wearying search, she gets a job as a waitress. One day she is called to serve a luncheon party and finds that it is Tazewell who is entertaining. In her perturbation, she drops a tray on the frock of his guest and humiliated leaves the restaurant. Before she does so, the proprietor tells her Tazewell wants to see her. She refuses to see him. At home in her boarding house, she is talking to Ann Graham when a note comes from Mrs. Fremys-Dillon asking to see her. Katrina had applied for a position as her companion but had been rejected; now the place is open again and Katrina is to come at once.

"AT YOUR AGE," reminiscently, "at 18 everything looked rosy and grand and marvelous to me. Ye-ah, I thought the world was my oyster. But with all the hard knocks I've had in the last 15 years . . . a marriage that went on the rocks . . . divorce . . . and now an alimony-dodging husband, I'm a wiser, if sadder, woman. I've been through puh-lenty in my life. I've had more'n my share of troubles . . ."

Trina pushed up as she was for time and already only too familiar with Ann Graham's "share of troubles," to forestall another rehearsing of them, said:

"I know . . . I know you've had a lot of tough breaks. So have I, but now," pulling dresses off hangers at frantic speed, "I seem at last to be getting a grand one. For, while I don't think the world's my oyster, and while I realize the job isn't 'cinched,' as you say, it's the next thing to it. Didn't Mrs. Fremys-Dillon write to me to take along enough clothes to last two weeks and didn't she sign herself 'hopefully yours?' All marvelously assuring, I'd say.

"If I don't hurry and show up at the Ritz, though," Katrina yanked a suitcase from beneath the bed, "the lady will think I'm not coming, and if I don't get some word to that chauffeur downstairs what will he think? That you failed to find me . . . that I'm not home . . . or what?"

Chauffeur Must Wait.

"Want me to beat it to the parlor and tell the guy you're packing? I forgot I left him there cooling his heels."

"Would you mind, really? I hate to put you to the trouble, yet if I take time to go down and back up three flights of stairs——"

"You'll be all day getting to the swanky dame's. Stay right where you are, dearie," insisted the landlady

"And say," from the doorway, "am I going to miss you if you do hook the peachy job? You'll never get too 'high hat' to come back and see me once in a while, though, will you, baby?"

With the garrulous Ann no longer there to distract and delay her, Trina finished the packing in short order and it was only a matter of minutes, thirty, or forty at the outside, before she was nearing the Ritz.

Nearing the hotel and figuring out in her head how long it would take, provided she secured the companion-position, to return to Tazewell Bronson that $625 he'd paid out for her. "Twenty-something weeks," was the calculation, "in case" she landed the job.

Yes, like a barometer in the center of a storm, Katrina's hopes, to her own amazement—she hadn't reckoned on the effect of proximity—shot down, up, down and up again as a trained nurse, a new one, conducted her into Mrs. Fremys-Dillon's bedroom.

Smile Was Appealing.

"Here I am. Bag and baggage!" Katrina's own appealing smile brought forth a gracious smile of welcome from Mrs. Fremys-Dillon who was reclining on the same old-rose-and-gold chaise longue where she'd left her the last time.

"So I see! Or rather, I see you but not the baggage. Where is it? In the car—or outside in the reception room or the living room?"

"In the reception room. The nurse suggested that I leave it there."

"Well, that's as good a place as any for the time being . . . while we're talking things over and seeing if we can reach an agreement. I hope we can. You're such a nice little thing. And I love your soft Southern voice. It's so gentle, low-pitched, musical and has such a soothing effect upon me. I've thought of it—and you—many, many times since you were here. Remember, I told you I was susceptible to voices."

Voice Was Asset.

"I do remember." Katrina smiled again, captivatingly, "and I consider myself fortunate to have the . . . the kind of voice that happens to appeal to you."

"It is an asset, so far as I am concerned. People with unpleasant, rasping voices jangle my nerves. I have a super-sensitive ear, you see. Do make yourself comfortable, though, child, and that boudoir chair just behind you is very comfortable. There," as Trina moved backward a step or two toward the chair, "pull it up closer and . . . and let us get down to business. I want to settle this matter of a companion so I can leave for Atlantic City. After those experiences with the two companions I wrote you about . . . Loula Sharpe, that was the name of the first one, and Mamie Udell, she was the second . . . I need not only a change of companions, but also a change of scene immediately.

"Those experiences! But before I begin to tell you of them, give me some smelling salts, will you, little girl? There are several bottles on the dressing table. I wish those, however, in the Lalique bottle."

Trina, bounding up from the chair in which she'd just "made herself comfortable," quickly identified the transparent, vase-like bottle.

"Shall I remove the stopper?" she said to the "semi-invalid."

"Will you, my dear? You certainly are a thoughtful child," between inhalations of the salts, ammonia carbonate delicately perfumed with jasmine, "aren't you? Where were we, though?" when Katrina was again in the boudoir chair.

She Looked Nice.

"You were telling me about your experiences——"

"Yes, yes. With those two . . . two persons. You must've seen the first one the day you came in answer to my ad, that Loula Sharpe. She wore lavender and was quite attractive. Pleasant-faced and with a likable manner."

"I, too, thought she was very, very sweet-looking," remarked Katrina. "I remember her well."

"The nurse I had at the time, Miss Purvis, also shared our opinion. But Loula Sharpe's looks were deceiving. She fooled me for a fare-you-well, for she wasn't half so well bred, half so kind and sympathetic as I thought. That appearance of breeding was only veneer. Her table manners betrayed her the very first night while we were dining here together in my bedroom. Shocking and grating as they were, however, I said nothing about them. But the next day when the woman presumed to argue with me concerning the pronunciation of certain French words——"

A Terrible Accent.

"So, she spoke French, this Mrs. Sharpe?" Trina, realizing she was supposed to say something, said the only thing that occurred to her.

"Spoke it and read it, that was her boast, but you should have heard her! What an accent! It was simply atrocious, as you would've seen—if you know French, and you must. Didn't you say you went to Mme. Jaquemart's, that French finishing school on the Hudson?"

"For four years. I also had a French governess as a child, but I'm making no boasts, Mrs. Fremys-Dillon."

"You wouldn't. You aren't the kind to blow your own horn. Too modest, too well-bred and too refined. Perhaps I shall test out your accent, though, sometimes if — if I engage you. Meanwhile, I want to finish what I started out to say. I was telling you about Mrs. Sharpe's abominable accent, was I not?"

She Mutilated French.

"Yes, about her accent."

"Well," rearranging a pillow, one of two or three fancy boudoir pillows under her head, "the woman . . . at her own suggestion, please bear that in mind . . . was reading a short story by De Maupassant, 'La Parure,' 'The Necklace.' You're probably familiar with it. It's his masterpiece."

Familiar with it! Trina felt that she knew "The Necklace" by heart—in French.

"Such a mutilation of superb French! Why, my dear, it was little less than sacrilege, Loula Sharpe's reading of Guy de Maupassant's chef d'ouvre. I endured it just so long, till my affronted ear could stand no more, then I stopped her. 'That will do, if you please,' I said. 'Hereafter in your readings to me kindly confine yourself to English.' Can you blame me?"

An Exacting Person.

"Not when her accent so displeased you. You had the right to say—and get—what you wanted."

"I should hope so, when I was employer and she was my employe. Nevertheless, the woman, in high dudgeon, demanded my reasons for stopping her, and I explained that I simply could not bear to hear the French 'u' pronounced like the English double 'o,' the double 'o' in coo, for example.

"'And that,' I added, 'is the way you invariably pronounce it. Not only you mispronounce all the other French vowels and all the French consonants as well. I never heard a worse, a more Americanized accent.' Now, you'd thing that would've ended the matter, wouldn't you?"

What TODAY Means

"Aires."

IF APRIL 12 is your birthday, the best hours for you on this date are from 10:15 a. m. to 12:15 p. m., from 2:15 to 4:15 p. m., and from 6:15 to 8:15 p. m. The danger periods are from 6:15 to 8:15 a. m., from 12:15 to 2:15 p. m., and from 4:15 to 6:15 p. m.

Look out for the "know-it-all" type of friends, for he or she is likely to offer you some advice, which, if followed, may lead to a complicated situation. The wrong way of doing a thing on this date will seem much easier than the right way. You will save yourself a lot of wasted effort if you avoid experimenting, in hope of saving time and labor.

Do nothing in your social contacts that may cause a friend to spend money, which he may not be able to afford to spend for pleasure. Married and engaged couples, as well as those making love, should exercise consideration as to engagements that may require a loss of the right amount of sleep for the one they are interested in.

If a woman and April 12 is your birthday, indulging in any form of superciliousness, or acting with hauteur with friends or acquaintances, is a dangerous mistake you must guard against. Remember it is much easier to lose than it is to gain popularity. We usually can trace most of our personal unhappiness to our own blundering.

Either socially or commercially you may attain a high position, and that is why it is important that your attitude toward others must be both kindly and considerate, else failure may follow success. Pen, pencil or brush, photography, educational or dramatic work, offer your skilled hands the opportunity to display their dexterity.

If a man and April 12 is your natal day, blessed with a great deal of ability, you may find through painting, sculptoring, writing, politics, manufacturing or engineering, the quickest way to fame and fortune.

A Word to Men

Perhaps you have noticed the movement of the Department Stores, Household Appliance Dealers and the Gas Company to replace old, out-of-date kitchen stoves with up-to-the-minute Modern Gas Ranges.

This is not an effort to catch the "fancy" of women. According to a recent estimate, approximately 60% of the stoves now in use in Washington are termed "old fashioned," while another 20% do not have all of the features that make a gas range modern; complete insulation, automatic top burner lighting, oven heat control, full porcelain enamel, and the approval of the American Gas Association laboratory.

This means that women using old ranges are spending almost twice the time and effort necessary for cooking—perhaps her hardest task. Modern Gas Ranges minimize failures, save money, make possible a wider variety of menus, give women more leisure hours. What is their comfort worth to you?

Why wait for your wife to suggest a new range? Right now—for a limited time only—every store selling Modern Gas Ranges is offering a special $15 allowance for the old stove, which means a definite $15 value to you. If your office was your kitchen, that old stove is the first thing you would replace for a better, more efficient, more economical range. Give her a pleasant surprise. Suggest that she buy a Modern Gas Range NOW.

Navajos Could Teach Whites a Few Things About Rearing Children, Indian Aid Says

Squaws Train Their Offspring With Kindness

Spare Rod Without Spoiling, Says Miss Sally Jean, of U. S. Service.

By Hope Ridings Miller.

IF NAVAJO SQUAWS have ever heard the adage, "Spare the rod and spoil the child," they have forgotten it.

The Navajo child is never a victim of his parent's ill-humor and never feels the sting of the switch. From his papoose days until he is grown, he knows nothing but tenderness and affection from his elders. Sterner white parents might conclude such treatment would tend to spoil the child, but Navajo offspring are as well-behaved, as courteous to their parents and as respectful to strangers as any children in the world.

So reports Miss Sally Lucas Jean, acting coordinator for the Navajo jurisdiction and health supervisor for the Indian Service. Miss Jean arrived in Washington recently with the Navajo delegation that came to discuss details of the Indian reorganization act.

Sees Lessons for Whites.

White persons could learn a lot from the Indians not only about disciplining children by kindness but about many other things, according to Miss Jean.

"The Navajos are a world within themselves," she said. "A world about which the white man knows little and from which he could learn much."

Most persons, Miss Jean further explained, still conceive of the Navajos as "just another small, dying out tribe of Indians who weave and wear blankets, ride the range on mustangs by day and sit around a camp fire by night, while their squaws prepare food and look after the children.

Correcting some of these impressions, Miss Jean pointed out that there are 45,000 Navajos now living in Arizona and New Mexico; that they have doubled the population in the last 50 years; that they are still nomads, living by their sheep, dwelling in octagon-shaped houses called "hogans," and making turquoise and silver beads, bracelets and rings while their squaws weave colorful blankets and rugs.

Discussing the living conditiops among the Navajos, Miss Jean described the traditional "hogan" as an eight-sided dwelling built either of stone or logs chinked with adobe. "Not all Navajos live in 'hogans,'" she explained. "Some—but comparatively few—live in houses. The majority prefer the 'hogan' because it has a hole in the top that provides an escape for both the smoke and the evil spirits, as well as an entrance for good spirits. The Navajo conceives evil thoughts as evil spirits; of good thoughts as good spirits."

There has been no effort on the part of the Government to change the type of living quarters except that Navajos have been encouraged to put windows and doors in their hogans and to build two hogans for each family instead of one. "These measures have obviously been made for hygienic reasons," she said.

While the Navajo is generally considered to be especially artistic, he is not particularly interested in beautifying the interior of his dwelling, Miss Jean said.

"Once I asked a Navajo boy to explain this to me. After much thought he replied, 'The whole world belongs to the Navajo—the sky, the sunset, and the landscape. Why, then, should he try to inclose beauty within the eight walls of his hogan? The Navajo's home is the great outdoors; his hogan is only the place where he sleeps.'"

Styles among the Navajos are as picturesque as their dwellings and as much in keeping with their traditions. While many have adopted the dress of the white man, the majority of Navajo men still wear corduroy trousers, colored shirts and buck-skin moccasins.

The typical Navajo squaw wears a de calico skirt, a velveteen e, trimmed in silver buttons, and moccasins of buckskin cut high and decorated with buttons made of dimes or quarters. Her hair is combed back and tied in a double knot at the nape of her neck.

The chief concerns of Navajo women are their children, their hogans and their spinning and weaving, according to Miss Jean. "But this does not indicate their interests are exclusively domestic," she said. "The Navajo woman attends chapter and council meetings with her husband and takes her children with her. There she sits quietly, realizing that if any important decisions are to be made she will be consulted. The squaw is a very important person among the Navajos."

New Schools Planned.

At present Navajo men and women are eagerly looking forward to the completion of the 47 new schools that have been planned for them, Miss Jean said. Fifteen of these will be ready for classes by the end of this month.

These will be much more than mere schools where lessons are taught and learned, Miss Jean explained. Admitting pupils from the ages of 6 to 60, they will be community centers where grandmothers and grandfathers, fathers and mothers will learn side by side with sons and daughters. Where not only the three "R's" will be taught, but also weaving, sewing, dam building, carpentry and the care of sheep and goats; where health instruction will be a valuable part of the curriculum.

An authority in the health education field, Miss Jean has developed health programs for schools of the Panama Canal Zone, the Philippines and the Virgin Islands.

Develops Health Program.

Her experiences in those localities as well as her study of the health work among Indians has led her to believe that native workers should be trained to carry on health work, as far as possible. Accordingly, one of her first steps in organizing an educational health program for the Navajos was to organize a Nurse Aid Institute in Santa Fe, N. Mex., where 98 Navajo girls were trained last year.

"These are now serving in schools under supervisors," Miss Jean said. "As the health program progresses, there will be more native nurse aids who will receive training as they serve."

In Miss Jean's opinion the new system of education among the Navajos will prove much more satisfactory than the former arrangement of sending boys and girls away from home for a "white man's" education.

"Under this system the Navajo will have all the advantages of the 'white man's education' while he is allowed to retain some of his own traditions," she said. "It should prove especially beneficial to Navajo men and women—those dignified, quiet, self-respecting individuals who, as a race, are keenly intelligent and who have the rare desire to adopt the best of the new while they still retain the best of the old."

This papoose—all dressed and bundled up—is ready to go places with its mother and isn't worrying for fear it will be spanked when it gets back home. "Navajo women discipline their children by kindness rather than by the switch," says Miss Sally Lucas Jean, acting coordinator for the Navajo jurisdiction.

Pointers Given Women Past 40 Seeking Work

A "WHITE LIE" about her numerical age is permissible under some circumstances for the older woman seeking a job, in the opinion of Mrs. Loire Brophy, official vocational counselor to the New York League of Business and Professional Women.

"Psychologists have agreed for years that age is the least stable and least scientific method of counting," Mrs. Brophy said. "They point out that in actual bone and tissue, men and women over 40 may be actually 30 and that mentally they may be—well, 12.

"Women are constantly asking me whether or not they should state their real ages. I believe a careful estimation of the appearance and the manner and the actual facts of the case should influence the statement of age for business purposes. As the matter now stands, women lie gallantly about their ages."

Mrs. Brophy pointed out that no matter how girlish looking or alert the woman past 40 may be, she finds a statement of her numerical age a handicap in looking for a job.

She warned women to be careful about taking into the business world habits that would "date them with a past generation." They should not appear too self-reliant, she said, because "men resent the idea of a woman's competing with them."

Threat of Knee Length Skirt Provokes Warning to Recall Freak Silhouettes of the 20's

By Malvina Lindsay.
Woman's Page Editor.

A FASHION magazine says women are "April fools" if they don't look back at themselves in the short pleated skirts of 1921 and take warning. No more ominous news could come out of Paris than a return of the 1921 modes. For 1921 was only the forerunner of sartorial tragedy of the century—the lady-in-a-barrel silhouette.

* * * *

1921—The beginning of the great post-war "freedom." Feverishly gay, slightly defiant young girls swishing shorter and still shorter skirts about ballrooms. Older women loking on with lifted eyebrows wondering how much higher the skirts would go. Sentimental social theorists lauding the flapper as the New Woman, as the clothes emancipator of her sex.

* * * *

Shocking to the world though it was, the short skirt definitely was in. Through successive seasons the hemline fell and rose, then fell and rose again, advancing to meet a descending waistline, until around the middle of the decade the Nation was treated to the grotesque spectacle of grandmothers at large in the habiliments of the nursery.

IT IS A FIRMLY intrenched tradition that the styles of all epochs appear equally absurd in retrospect; that the smart and beautiful creations we wear today will make us the laughing stock of those who look at our photographs tomorrow. But that is not always true. Some seasons everything seems to conspire to give the average woman a worse break in clothes than ordinary, to turn her into an historically unforgettable freak.

* * * *

1926—The golden year of "normal" economics and nightmarish femininity. Fat, flabby women in dresses shaped like flour sacks whose hemlines just missed meeting rolled hose. Tall, skinny women in top-heavy dresses that revealed knobby knees. Aged women tottering along in ballet dancers' skirts. Self-conscious women in street cars futilely trying to pull abbreviated skirts over bare knees. Waistlines hugging the hips, the human body disguised and distorted. The disappearance of all beauty of line in dress, of all grace, all subtlety; the gratification of utility, brazenness, ugliness.

If for no other reason than this disturbing memory, every woman should greet with dismay the threatened return to the good old days of 1926 or even the glorious freedom of 1921. However, if a new short skirt movement or, for that matter, any kind of freakish dress movement is under way, there is little its victims can do about it.

THIS IS NOT because, as so many believe, that women are sheepish slaves of the mode. It is rather because they are helpless in the face of industrial regimentation. Now that appareling has been taken from the home, there is little a woman can do to express her creative instincts in dress or to achieve the individuality in costume that charm experts always are urging. True, she has some power of selection, but unless her pocketbook is large enough to afford the services of a designer or the purchase of "exclusive" frocks, she can do little but buy what "they" are wearing, whether it be a Eugenie hat or a hobble skirt.

* * * *

Moreover, it was long the rule that only the most extreme, the most freakish, the most ugly of all styles were available for the woman of small purchasing power. For some reason, apparel manufacturers proceeded on the assumption that the poor-but-genteel tradition had disappeared from American life and that a person who wanted a $3.50 hat or a $4.50 shoe was necessarily a vulgarian in taste.

* * * *

Recently, however, there has been an encouraging trend away from this attitude and an increasing number of models in shoes, dresses and even hats are offered to the woman of flat purse but artistic aspiration. However, much more improvement along this line is needed and women, now that they have become articulate as consumers, should demand it. Especially if a new freak era is in prospect, manufacturers might find it well worth their time to come to the aid of the woman who would follow style trends in a conservative manner, who would look genteel but not dowdy, smart but not cheap, who would avoid making herself a caricature for the family album.

19-Year-Old Wife and Mother Points Out to "Peggy" the Pitfalls Which Lie in Wait for Girl Who Kisses Indiscriminately.

By Mary Haworth.

DEAR MISS HAWORTH: I was very much interested in the letter from "Peggy" which you published in Wednesday's Post, and your advice to her. From my own experience I found that the boys and young men of today have more respect and sincere liking for a girl who does not casually kiss a boy good-night or ride around in his lap.

* * * *

It is very true that the girl who does these things has more dates, but when it comes to friendship and, later in life, love and marriage, the girl who has kept herself above such trivial panderings to men's desires has a larger number of real men friends and will make a happier selection of a life's mate.

* * * *

It seems to me the girl who does not indiscriminately kiss all her dates is in less danger of making the mistake of judging (or shall I say misjudging) mere physical attraction or passion for love that will endure.

* * * *

My standards while I was dating were the same as "Peggy's" after the first month or two, during which I had tried the other course of action and found it unsatisfactory. I had two or three very good boy friends for whom I had a sincere affection, whom it was natural and not at all degrading to kiss good-night.

* * * *

But the others I never allowed to encroach upon my self-respect. As a result of this course of action I felt myself clean and worthy of a man's love, and have the respect of all my friends—several of them boys I have dated—a husband whom I love devotedly and by whom I am loved; and a darling baby a year old.

* * * *

And I know that promiscuous kissing, while perhaps giving a thrill at first, creates within the girl allowing it a sense of having nothing much left in life to experience and causes her to become blase. I have seen it happen among my girl friends too many times.

* * * *

I wish to give "Peggy" my vote of congratulation for her stand and I hope this statement may, if she should read it, be a source of encouragement to her in her lonely but courageous stand. Sincerely, 19-year-old.

WIFE-AND-MOTHER.

* * * *

DEAR WIFE-AND-MOTHER: On behalf of "Peggy" and young moderns who may have been pondering the question perplexing her—namely, to kiss or not to kiss all men friends good-night; to permit or prohibit lap-sitting or other such careless conduct as comes under the heading of "petting," "necking" and even "making woo"—I want to thank you for injecting the findings of your own experience into the discussion.

* * * *

I believe your opinion, being that of an experienced contemporary, will carry more weight with youngsters of "Peggy's" age than any amount of preachment coming from persons outside their generation. However, it is nice to know that we who can never be 19 again are not necessarily dated "fogies" because we hold for a modicum of restraint and discrimination in social contact between the sexes.

* * * *

Theology's definition of a sacrament is that it is an outward expression of an inward grace, and this definition applies as well to any symbol of affection or sentiment exchanged between man and woman, boy and girl. To kiss, to embrace another for whom one does not keenly feel this mystic bond of spiritual kinship is to have reversed the symbol until it becomes a sacrilege, desecrating and violating one's innermost self. And because such a sense of self-betrayal is often the beginning of a lifetime process of character disintegration it is very necessary to guard against it.

M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Neurasthenia Obsolete Term for Ailment

Physicians Have Learned to Look for Specific Organic Disease.

Family Doctor Type of Advice Declared Best for Nerve Patients.

By Dr. Irving S. Cutter.

THOUGH we may dislike to do so, it appears that we shall have to give up use of that euphonious term, neurasthenia. It was such an easy way out when a patient presented numerous indefinite symptoms, particularly when the patient himself supplied the clew: "I am tired all the time, just nervously exhausted." Long since we have learned to look for specific organic disease, for example, anemia, disease of the digestive tract, early tuberculosis, mild dementia precox, beginning heart failure, etc.

Nevertheless there is a disease entity, "nervous exhaustion," and it will appear with no detectable organic cause. We recognize today in many patients the situation that was described in 1855 by a Keokuk, Ia., physician, John R. Allen, who decried the woman's rights movement and the use of quasi-male attire (bloomers) as leading to the rearing of children who were "bundles of nerves." Some years later a Michigan physician, E. H. Van Deusen, of Kalamazoo, wrote that the condition (neurasthenia) was due to "the hothouse educational system of the present day, and the rash, restless, speculative character of many of our business enterprises."

What type of disease did these writers refer to? The symptoms have not varied from the time of Allen and Van Deusen to our own day. The sufferer is described as possessed by a constant feeling of weakness. The slightest effort to exercise, to study, or to read is followed by overpowering fatigue. There is constipation and much gas and the patient may complain of "dyspepsia" or "gastritis." Occasionally there is palpitation of the heart, more noticeable in the presence of exertion, strain, or emotion. The extremities are cold and there is an indefinable tingling in the legs and fingers. There is usually an ever present dull headache.

Most of these patients are ill. They can not be dismissed with a wave of the hand and the statement, "It's your imagination; there is nothing wrong." At one time Weir Mitchell put them to bed, fed them, and compelled them to gain weight. Many of his patients recovered because they rested and thus built body reserve. As he put it, "I padded their nerves with fat."

Since Mitchell's time we have learned the importance of toxins and we know that nerve cells as well as muscle cells are subject to poisoning and exhaustion. Family difficulties may wear on the nervous system. A severe emotional upset may develop a long train of introspective symptoms. Many of these persons who visit physician after physician, obtaining no substantial satisfaction, will finally embrace some healing "ism" or give up in despair and resign themselves to a life of semi-invalidism.

We recognize the condition today as a neurosis of a fatigue character. After correcting anemia or other organic manifestations of disease, it is the job of the discerning physician to gain the confidence of the patient and help him to uncover the disturbing mental factors that are responsible. Until these are identified and replaced by a cheerful philosophy of life recovery is not possible. These patients must be dealt with gently; never frightened.

Judges Fight Claw Device Tax Measure

Ask Nice to Veto Bill Giving Relief Plan Body Blow.

Declare Machines Work of 'Crooked Gamblers,' Not Sportsmen.

By the Associated Press.

Baltimore, April 11.—Maryland's much-maligned plan for raising $5,000,000 in relief revenue took another body blow today as seven members of the supreme bench of Baltimore City asked Gov. Nice to veto a bill imposing a tax on "claw" machines, revenue from which has been earmarked for relief.

The proposed tax is one of four components of the revenue-raising plan patched up by the Legislature in its closing hours to meet Federal demands that the State raise $5,000,000 yearly for relief.

In the meantime, State Relief Administrator Harry Greenstein still had received no word late today regarding a Federal allotment of relief funds to this State. It is expected that the allotment will be forthcoming in time to prevent serious curtailment of activities, however.

One of those four parts, a bill which would allow the State to take over unclaimed bank deposits, already is out of the picture. Gov. Nice announced some days ago that he would veto the measure.

The major part of the plan—a tax of 1 per cent on gross receipts of retail merchants—was contested bitterly by merchants, who still have not decided whether they will contest it in the courts. If the act is tested and the courts hold it unconstitutional, a special session of the Legislature will be required to devise other methods of raising relief revenue.

The fourth part of the Legislature's plan provides for revenue from the State inheritance taxes—if that revenue exceeds the $350,000 yearly needed to service charges on the emergency bond issue of $8,500,000. The Legislature, in providing that the inheritance taxes should service the bonds, thought little enough of that source of revenue to provide a "cushion" tax on real estate to service the bonds if the inheritance taxes did not yield the required amount.

The announcement that seven of the Baltimore city judges had asked the Governor to veto the "claw" machine tax was made by Judge Albert S. J. Owens. In a letter, Judge Owens charged that the measure was not for the benefit of honest men or even sportsmanlike gamblers, but for the "benefit of dishonest men and crooked gamblers."

He added that, in his opinion, the tax would yield nearer $25,000 yearly than the $250,000 estimated by the Legislature.

Tazewell County Shortage Reported

Clerk Said to Have Used Sum Claimed Due Him.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 11.—An audit of accounts from June 1, 1931, to January 31, 1935, has revealed a $2,595 shortage in the accounts of H. S. Surface, clerk of Tazewell County, State Auditor L. McCarthy Downs reported today.

The clerk was accountable for $10,163 and had on hand $7,568, Downs reported, stating that the clerk explained he had used some of the fund in anticipation of payment to him by the board of supervisors of a claim he had presented for certain services rendered the county.

Downs said he was informed by "reliable persons" that Surface would deposit to his official account a sum equivalent to his shortage.

Ocean City, Md., April 11.—A continuation of the high surf of the last several days again today kept Ocean City coast guardsmen from launching a boat to investigate a derelict craft reported awash ten miles off the coast here.

There has been no sign of life aboard the craft, believed to be a lighter, and for that reason Capt. T. T. Moore, of the coast guard station here, has declined to risk the lives of his men in launching a boat. If there were men aboard the derelict, he said, a boat would have been launched at once.

Until it is possible to send out a boat, it will not be known if the lighter is the source of the 800 gallons of grain alchohol which washed ashore just north of here during the recent storm. The alcohol, contained in three-gallon cans, is being held here by the coast guard pending identification.

Capt. Moore said it is probable the lighter broke loose from its tow north of here in the storm and drifted down.

Dead Woman's Note May Free Man She Loved

Plan to Commit Suicide Revealed in Papers of Mrs. Gilliam.

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., April 11.—Paul (Red) Berry expects a note from the woman he is charged with murdering to clear him in a preliminary hearing tomorrow before Trial Justice R. R. Beaton at Portsmouth. Arrested several days ago, he has been held in jail there in default of $5,000 bond.

The note, which indicated suicidal intentions, was found in the papers of Mrs. Jennie Hanes Gilliam, the deceased, by Fred C. Abbott, attorney for her relatives, and was turned over to counsel for Berry.

Briefly and tersely written, the note professed the love of Mrs. Gilliam for Berry, pointed to the evils of whisky, and directed that the church care for "Bud," identified by relatives as an invalid brother of Mrs. Gilliam.

Berry reported to police on March 27 that he had found the body of Mrs. Gilliam, in whose Norfolk home he was a boarder, in a front room, a bullet through her body and a revolver in her hand. Arrested, Berry denied any connection with the woman's death.

Mechanicsville Organizes Own Fire Protection

Water Supply Provided; Volunteer Company Is Organized.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Mechanicsville, Md., April 11.—Spurred by fires causing damage of almost $60,000 within the last two a volunteer fire department and years, residents here have organized are building a 500,000-gallon fire reservoir, now nearing completion at the edge of the town.

The new reservoir, on land given by A. E. Meredith, is being constructed with funds raised by local contributions and with labor paid from State relief funds. It is to be connected to several points in the town with six-inch pipe, claimed by State authorities to be of sufficient size to handle any necessary flow of water.

Action toward formation of the fire department unit was started last July when a $50,000 fire leveled one of the largest buildings here. Fire trucks from Leonardtown carrying only 500 gallons of water did little to check the flames despite early arrival. In November citizens met and chose S. Bernard Burch, chairman; Henry Fowler, secretary, and R. H. Sothoron, treasurer.

Completion of the reservoir now awaits Annapolis approval of allocation of emergency funds for the pipe line.

Alexandria Garden Club Wins Narcissus Show Prize Medal

B. J. Fernald, of Martinsville Group, Takes Sweepstakes Cup; 450 Entries Are on View at Armory Hall.

By Elisabeth C. Taylor.
A Special Correspondent.

The Alexandria Garden Club was the winner of the medal given by the Garden Club of America at the fourth annual Narcissus Show, which opened yesterday in Armory Hall at Alexandria. The Sweepstakes cup, donated by Mrs. Leslie H. Gray, of Orange, Va., was won by B. G. Fernald, of the Martinsville (Va.) Garden Club. Runners-up for the cup, which must be won three times for possession, were Mrs. Lewis G. Larus, of Westhampton, Richmond; and Mr. Robert Moncure, of Jefferson Park, Alexandria.

More than 450 exhibits were included in the show. One of the outstanding exhibits was that of B. Y. Morrison, of the American Horticultural Society. The winner of the Sweepstakes cup last year was Miss Martha Harris, who did not enter an exhibit this year. Mrs. Floyd Harris, chairman of the narcissus test committee of the Garden Club of Virginia, brought a large exhibit from the narcissus test gardens at Aldie, Va.

Mrs. H. Hollerith, of the Georgetown club, won a blue ribbon on a triandrus hybrid. Of the 15 classes of exhibits, 4 were for arrangements. The prize cup was given for all classes as a whole.

Exhibits were entered from practically every garden club in Virginia and from a number of narcissus growers from nearby States. A particularly interesting exhibit was a collection of antique flower containers from Fredericksburg, Va. Special exhibits came by air-mail from Portland, Oreg.; also specimens from the gardens of Van Maveren & Son, of Gloucester.

Assisting the chairman, Mrs. Harris, in the management of the narcissus show were Mrs. Richard Wainwright, jr., of Leesburg; Mrs. Richard Hammett, of Alexandria, and Mrs. Taylor Burke, of Alexandria.

Federal Experts Survey Orchards

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Winchester, Va., April 11.—In an effort to determine which trees yield greatest dividends and why, a survey of orchards in Frederick, Clarke and Shenandoah counties is being made this week by members of the Farm Credit Administration and representatives of the Department of Agriculture.

The comparative value of different commercial varieties will be studied and the data will include figures showing the comparative yields and selling prices.

When the survey here is completed, the party expects to move into Berkeley County, W. Va., with headquarters in Charles Town and Martinsburg. Those making the survey are C. J. Blair, jr., J. A. P. Saunders and N. A. Eaton, jr., of the Farm Credit Administration, and W. H. Youngman, R. F. Burdette, L. J. Ducoff and A. H. Hackendorff, of the Department of Agriculture.

Last Hearing On Vital Bills Is Set Today

Nice's Decision on Oath for Teachers and New Bridge Awaited.

By a Staff Correspondent.

Annapolis, Md., April 11.—Tomorrow marks the deadline fixed by Gov. Harry W. Nice for hearings on bills passed at the recent session of the General Assembly over which there is controversy. Although early indications pointed to prompt action on the several measures now before him, weeks will elapse before all of the measures are disposed of, according to an announcement from the executive offices today. The Governor has about 30 days from the date of final hearings in which to sign, if he elects to defer final action for that period.

Keenest interest centers in the Governor's decision on the bill requiring teachers in State-aided institutions to take the oath of allegiance to the United States, and the measure providing for a bridge in the upper reaches of Chesapeake Bay, hearings on which took up most all of his time yesterday. Although he is noncommittal, indications today were that the Governor leans toward the oath bill and that he will veto the bridge proposal.

Will Confer With O'Connor.

The Governor announced that he will begin a series of conferences with Attorney General Herbert R. O'Connor Monday on these and several other measures, notably the bill permitting clerks of courts and treasurers of certain counties to issue automobile license tags.

The Governor was busy today with a series of hearings on a number of measures, most of which embrace legislation for the several counties. He found time to preside over a meeting of the Board of Public Works at which an issue of $5,500,000 3 per cent bonds, part of the $8,500,000 authorized by an act of the recent assembly, was sold to the Mercantile Trust Co. of Baltimore and a group of associates at a price of 107.699. He was compelled, however, to miss the initial meeting of the Maryland Hall of Records Commission, also created by an act of the last assembly to provide the necessary set-up for the Hall of Records Building, erected on the front campus of St. John's College. The structure is part of the State's tercentennary program.

Committee Appointed.

Permanent organization of the commission was deferred, but Chief Judge T. Carroll Bond of the Court of Appeals was delegated as acting chairman and a committee consisting of Dr. Joseph S. Ames, president of Johns Hopkins University; Col. Amos W. W. Woodcock, president of St. John's College, and Judge Bond was appointed to handle various questions that will arise. This committee will have to do with recommendations for appointments to the office force, all of whom, it is pointed out, must be skilled men. The list will be headed by an archivist, whose salary, it is understood, will be $5,000 a year.

Advised of the death of Delegate Alda P. Whitby, of the Caroline County delegation in the House, which occurred at his home in Denton yesterday, the Governor appointed the following official legislative committee to attend the funeral in Denton tomorrow afternoon: Delegates J. Walter Mitchell, Caroline County; Earl Bennett, D. Floyd Brinsfield and Samuel M. Brohawn, Dorchester County; Joseph W. A. Evans and Percy E. Thomas, Queen Anne's County; William T. Harrison, J. Frank Fairbanks and Charles A. Coulby, Talbot County.

Virginia Children Illiterate By Thousands, Many in Jails

Sweet Briar Teacher Warns That Underprivileged Must Be Cared For.

By the Associated Press.

Charlottesville, April 11.—Fifteen hundred boys and girls under 18 are in jail and many thousands of others are illiterate, feeble-minded or underprivileged.

Dr. Beele Brooke Beard, Sweet Briar College professor, writing for the April 15 issue of the University News Letter, made this statement today in a summary on Virginia child welfare conditions, which she concluded with the declaration that if Virginia "is to have sons of whom she may be proud she must protect her children."

Thousands Illiterate.

"Fourteen thousand five hundred and twenty-six native whites between the ages of 10 and 24 are illiterate. Of these, 3,524 are 10 to 14 years of age.

"Eighteen thousand five hundred and sixty-three colored between the ages of 10 and 24 are illiterate. Of these, 4,130 are 10 to 14 years of age.

"55,760 young people between the ages of 7 and 15, inclusive, are not attending school.

"11,737 backward or retarded children should be provided with special class facilities.

"3,400 feeble-minded children need institutional care and training.

"1,584 children died last year of preventable contagious diseses.

"1,418 children are crippled.

"46,790 children have defective vision.

"90,326 children are underweight 10 per cent or more.

"1,500 boys and girls under 18 were detained in jails.

"3,000 delinquents should have individual study and treatment.

"15,000 young men (10,000 rural and 5,000 urban) are leaving school each year and must find employment.

"350,000 children are members of marginal or submarginal rural families.

Groups Not Exclusive.

Dr. Boone said these groups are not mutually exclusive. For example, she explained, it is possible that the same child may be enumerated with the illiterate and again the malnourished.

"Child welfare in Virginia," she said, "in the final analysis depends upon the conscientious cooperation of all her citizens. It can not be achieved without the fundamental prerequisites of economic security, happy family life, the prevention and alleviation of sickness and suffering, adequate recreational facilities, freedom from oppressive toil, opportunity for religious expression and a continuous program of education suited to the needs of each individual."

Peery Insists Hopkins Tell Relief Plans

Governor Uncertain He Will Ask Assembly to Vote Funds.

'We Can't Go On' Spending, He Says of Call for $5,000,000.

By the Associated Press.

Richmond, Va., April 11.—Standing firm in his insistence that Virginia's relief problem would have to be clarified first in Washington, Gov. Peery said today he did not regard calling a special session of the General Assembly to raise State funds as "inevitable."

"We are going to let them settle down in Washington and determine what they have in mind before we decide what our course will be," the Governor declared.

"But one thing is certain," he continued, "this spending has got to stop somewhere, sometime. We can't go on like this."

Speculation as to how Virginia would raise $5,000,000 as its share of relief expenditures—the amount FERA Administrator Harry Hopkins has announced would be necessary—found the same answer among most observers as expressed by Tax Commissioner C. H. Morrissett, who said a sales tax enacted by the Legislature was the only source he knew for such a large sum. He estimated a 1 per cent sales tax without exceptions would raise as much as $4,500,000.

Both the Governor and Morrissett made it clear they still regarded the sales levy as a tax of last resort.

Hopkins Scoffs at Idea Virginia May Deny Cash

By the Associated Press.

Harry L. Hopkins, the relief administrator, scoffed yesterday at the idea that Virginia might not provide the $5,000,000 State contribution he asked for relief of its needy, according to the Associated Press.

"I don't think there's any real problem there," he said.

He said he hadn't seen Gov. Peery's comment of surprise at the amount Hopkins requested Wednesday from the State for the fiscal year starting next July 1. He had nothing to say on that.

And, he wouldn't say if or when the Old Dominion would be cut off from the Federal relief funds if the State contribution were not made.

Denies Seeking a Fight.

He did say, with emphasis, that if a State failed to come across "we'll just stop giving them Federal relief," and he backed it up by announcing Pennsylvania wasn't going to get any more Federal money until the State joins in, financially, with an appropriation.

Asked if a State road building program, such as Virginia had under way, would be considered State relief participation, he said:

"We've had that out with Virginia a dozen times, and the answer is still the same."

The answer in the past has been that the road program was not a true relief program and that Virginia should make some contribution toward direct relief, carried on in the State now on Federal and local funds.

"I know what you're trying to do," Hopkins said, in answering one of newsmen's questions about Virginia, "you want to start a fight between me and the Governor. I can't help you. The Governor and I are getting along all right."

Rolls the Same, Costs Climb.

In a formal announcement, the Administration disclosed that the number of families and single persons on relief in Virginia's three largest cities had remained practically the same from February to March, but relief costs at Norfolk and Roanoke had increased appreciably.

At Richmond the number was 5,311, compared with 4,363, and the cost $84,252, compared with $90,135.

Washington Audiences Pay Little Heed to Legitimate Hits Shown Here First

They Decorate Tomorrow's Screen

At left, above, as you may have suspected, is that resourceful comedian, W. C. Fields, as he appears with Bing Crosby, Joan Bennett and numerous others in that bit of whimsy known as "Mississippi," which continues its gaily melodious course through a second week at Loew's Palace, beginning tomorrow. At right is that attractive young sprite, Ann Sheridan, who moves along a peg or two toward stardom as the principal lure in "Car 99," a detailed exposition of Michigan police work, to be revealed, also, on the Earle screen tomorrow morning.

First Nights in Capital Deserve Maximum Aid

Premieres Offer Evidence; Roadsiders Have Plans; Theater Notes.

By Nelson B. Bell.

In yesterday morning's broadcast over Station WJSV—were you listenin'? I presume not—we had something to say concerning the indifference of Washington's theatergoing public to the virtues of new plays revealed here for the first time.

The whole business, more or less, harked back to the friendly controversy carried on among Richard W. Westwood, editor of Nature Magazine, Equity and me, celebrated in these columns a week or so ago.

Mr. Westwood's and Equity's contention seemed to be that Washington was getting too many "first times on any stage," without knowing what they were all about, but with being assessed first-line tariffs for the experiment of finding out. I objected to this notion that our adherents of the living stage were being, as the jargon has it, "gypped."

They Stayed Away.

It seems that many of them were not applicants for my ostensibly helpful advices. They stayed away from "Three Men on a Horse," one of the smash hits of the New York season, in droves when it was first disclosed here as a successful aspirant for Broadway acclaim, and they did likewise in the case of "Ceiling Zero," which opened last night in the Music Box Theater in New York.

"Ceiling Zero," we are constrained to believe, will be a box-office hit only slightly secondary to "Three Men on a Horse." It seems to have everything. And they still stayed away from the ticket wicket when it was first shown here.

What to do? We get the hits first, and nobody, apparently, will believe it. If a New York verdict is needed before a Washington public will take a play seriously, then the Capital of the Nation might just as well take its place among the mediocrities of showdom, content to be among the "also rans."

So far, that is what we have been, the bits of the season being what they are!

While we are speaking, as somebody was back there, about theater attendance and the like, what to do about this Hugh Herbert fellow who is packing them in at the Earle this week? Mr. Herbert has a swell story to yarn you about a hippopotamus—and a rhinerceros won't do. You should get him to tell it to you some time, with proper settings and all. It is funnier than anything he is doing in "Traveling Saleslady," on the Earle screen this week—and that really is funnier than necessary.

Roadsiders Again.

Organization of the Roadside Theater's acting company for the summer season of 1935 will be well under way by the end of this month.

In addition to many of last year's favorites who have already promised to play, the managing board expects to secure new talent from among Washington's acting groups. Open try-outs will be held on Wednesday and Thursday evenings, April 24 and 25 at 8 o'clock in the auditorium of the Mount Pleasant Congregational Church on Columbia road between Fourteenth and Fifteenth streets northwest.

A distinctly different plan from that of last summer will be carried out by the theater in assembling its acting group for the coming season. Instead of the two separate groups modeled along stock company lines who last year alternated melodramas with modern comedies, there will be but a single official Roadside Theater Company.

Each play will be cast separately, and actors will be "signed up" for certain roles in certain plays. This plan serves a threefold purpose: First, of presenting in major roles a greater number of Washington's ablest actors and actresses than is possible in the double-barreled stock company; second, of giving the individual actor opportunity to do various types of roles rather than playing the same "stock" type each time; and, finally, of allowing some vacation time to the actors by virtue of playing in, say, the first, third and sixth, instead of the first third and fifth.

The theater plans to produce seven plays this summer, which is one more than they did last year.

The rout tossed in favor of Hugh Herbert and Mrs. Herbert, Gracie Barrie, who comes into the Earle for an extended engagement, and Bert Granoff, who goes out for three months, in the Warner Brothers clubrooms Tuesday night was quite an affair, entailing, as it did, an impromptu broadcast, and all the rest of it, over WJSV. The soiree, if that is what it was, was continued last night by Mr. and Mrs. Sidney Lust as hosts to showdom at the Troika. Quite a party, say we all!

Variety Club Plans.

Washington's Variety Club, Tent No. 11, through its chief barker, Rudolph Berger, announces that the next two months will be ones filled to the top with entertainments, golf matches, showboat cruises and what not.

Already Sam Galanty, chairman of the golf match is fast at work, and at this writing it appears that Manor Club out at Norbeck, Md., will be the scene of the event. In order to make the golf tournament doubly attractive, it is anticipated that it will be a mixed affair, with golf, tennis, bridge and horseback riding for the ladies and those who do not play golf.

The golf tournament will be followed up that evening with a dinner dance, at which trophies and other prizes will be awarded. This event is scheduled for the latter part of May.

July will find Carter Barron, chairman of the entertainment committee leading members of the club and their guests on a "show-boat" cruise down the historic Potomac River. The cruise will be held at night with dancing, entertainment and a buffet supper being served.

Several charitable gifts are now being considered by the committee on welfare and public charities, headed by A. E. Lichtman.

Kings for the day for the next two months luncheons and smokers are as follows: Smoker, April 15, Clark Davis and James Fitzgerald; luncheon, April 22, Harry Somerville and Jimmy Lake; smoker, April 29, Edmund Toland and Dan Terrell; luncheon, May 6, Carter Barron and Harry Lohmeyer; smoker, May 13, Charles Kranz and Sam Wheeler; luncheon, May 20, Harry Hunter and Joe Morgan.

Gracie Barrie, it may be recalled, made her stage debut under the name of Gracie Rogers—a project that was slightly blighted by the emergence at abiut the same time of Ginger of the same name. So Gracie changed her name to Barrie, for no good reason, and began to click from then on. If you care to observe the complete measure of her clicking you have only to go to the Earle this week, or next—or even the week after that.

Young Actor Comes On.

Actors whose personalities and abilities are outstanding have a tendency to sneak up on the public, until they have made a distinct impression on the audience mind. Gene Lockhart is one of these, and as Swayne, the butler in "Star of Midnight" at Keith's he is revealed as a distinctly likable screen personality.

Washingtonians missed seeing Lockhart in one of the finest performances of his career, for Hollywood claimed his services last summer, and he was unable to tour in "Ah, Wilderness" with George M. Cohan this season. He created the role of Sid Davis, the irresponsible reporter in that play last season, and gave such a fine performance that the RKO Radio Picture scouts recommended him for pictures.

"It's more difficult to be funny on the screen than on the stage," Lockhart comments, "because on the screen there is no audience reaction, no laughter, to tell you whether you are really funny or not. It took me days in the studio before I became accustomed to it, for once a comedian always a comedian and laughter is the comedian's one reward."

Lockhart's previous pictures were "By Your Leave" and "Captain Hurricane."

Last-Minute Note.

So they gave a party to Mr. Herbert! Well, well.

Or maybe not so well!

Virginia Jury Lists Name Only Whites

Chance Remote That Negro May Be Called.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Petersburg, Va., April 11.—Possibility of a Negro being listed for services either of a trial or grand jury in Petersburg this year is slight. In accordance with the Virginia code, Petersburg's three jury commissioners have drawn a list of more than 500 persons to serve on juries and this list does not include the name of any colored person.

Judge R. T. Wilson, of hustings court, has drawn the list of 48 persons for the grand jury for the year.

The trial jury list has been drawn by Commissioners Robert Morris, Bernard W. Matthews and Fred H. Wright. A judge does not draw a trial jury. Judge Wilson, commenting on the matter, states:

"Purpose of the law is to keep judges from selecting juries. A judge has absolutely nothing to do with who is put on a jury list. Names on this list are put there by the jury commissioners and they alone are responsible."

Politics Barred At Anti-War Meet

New Yorker, Professors to Address Va. Students.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Charlottesville, Va., April 11.—The University of Virginia student demonstration against war will be held tomorrow morning, as originally planned, the undergraduate antiwar committee announced today.

J. B. Matthews, of New York, will be the principal speaker at the student mass meeting scheduled for 11:30 o'clock in McIntire Amphitheater.

President John Lloyd Newcomb, who has sanctioned the demonstration and ordered classes suspended for an hour tomorrow morning for the student protest, yesterday made it known to the committee that the occasion must not be used for political faiths' propaganda.

Matthews is the student committee's choice for the principal antiwar address. Others scheduled to make talks are Dean Ivy F. Lewis, Dr. Robert K. Gooch and Dr. Scott Buchanan, all of the university faculty.

Entertainment For New Week Is Made Known

Theaters Announce Plans for Seven-Day Period Beginning Tomorrow.

(Reprinted from Yesterday's Last Edition.)

For the week beginning tomorrow, Loew's Fox Theater will present as the major feature of its screen bill, "The Casino Murder Case," in which the stellar role is played by Paul Lukas. This is heralded as one of S. S. Van Dine's most engaging mysteries and numbers among its cast, in addition to Mr. Lukas, such notables as Alison Skipworth, Donald Cook, Arthur Byron, Ted Healy and Louise Fazenda. The stage portion of the entertainment will be provided by the "Spices of 1935" revue, which in itself presents a complete musical diversion, headed by Count Berni Vici, Ted Healy's former stooges, Garner, Wolf and Hakins, and 15 alluring symphonists.

• • • •

Fred McMurray, first seen in the Capital as juvenile lead with May Robson in "Grand Old Girl" and subsequently as leading man with Claudette Colbert in "The Gilded Lily," is star of "Car 99," the exciting film play based on the adventures of the Michigan State Police in running down crime. The plot had its genesis, as a vast number of the public will recognize, in the skillfully contrived stories of police work run in the most popular of the weekly gazettes. On the stage, Eddie Peabody, the peer of them all in his plunking of a banjo, will headline the vaudeville bill. Gracie Barrie, former mistress of ceremonies at the Earle, will continue another week as a leading attraction and other acts will be presented by Cass, Mack, Owen and Topsy, and Jean and Joan, with Lew Duthers in 'Sophisticated Rhythm."

• • • •

Today, at the Belasco Theater, the film attraction will be "The Road to Life," a picture based on the struggle of youth for a "place in the sun," as the saying goes, since the World War. There have been comparable works submitted to the public through the medium of the cinema in this country since the culmination of the great struggle, but never, they say, so powerful a screen preachment as this. The major feature will be augmented, as usual, by short-reel subjects of scrupulous selection.

• • • •

As its major screen feature, beginning tomorrow—after a protracted run of that splendid celluloid musical, "Roberta"—RKO-Keith's Theater will present for the first time in the Capital the new vehicle for the joint talents of William Powell and Ginger Rogers, "Star of Midnight." This is a widely lauded piece that has met with acclaim in other key cities where it has been shown. The bill will, of course, be supplemented by abbreviated sound subjects and a new issue of the Pathe News.

• • • •

At Loew's Columbia Theater, beginning tomorrow, the principal screen feature will be that admirable Will Rogers gelatin subject known by the name of "Life Begins at 40"—whether it does or not! The supplementary roles in this film are especially well played and altogether it represents one of Mr. Rogers' more impressive undertakings. The bill will be completed by an adequate complement of short sound subjects and a new issue of the newsreel.

• • • •

"Ruggles of Red Gap," that lusty saga of the West written by Harry Leon Wilson, will continue for a second week of its extended downtown run at the Metropolitan Theater, beginning tomorrow. In this finely filmed version of a literary, if that is the word, "best seller," Charles Laughton, Charlie Ruggles, Mary Boland, Lucien Littlefield, Maude Eburne and others of note have leading parts—which they play right up to the hilt, whatever that is. The bill is supplemented by short sound subjects and a full 15-minute newsreel.

• • • •

"Mississippi," that excellent film depiction of the day of crinolines and showboats, will continue for a second week at the Palace Theater, with Bing Crosby, W. C. Fields, Queenie Smith and others of the first rank in the roles of primary importance. The auxiliary subjects include a wise selection of short-reel attractions, inclusive of a new newsreel and cartoon comedy.

• • • •

The title of the new Independent Burlesque Association attraction playing the Gayety Theater for the week beginning with the usual Sunday matinee is "Messin' Around." The principal comedy roles are taken by Fred Binder and Phil Stone. The featured feminine member of the cast is Billie Holmes, noted for a number of things, not the least of which may be said to be her pulchritudinous contours. These, it may further be said, Miss Holmes makes no very earnest effort to conceal. The customary dancing ensemble will add to the gayety of the Gayety occasion.

Hollywood

By Sidney Skolsky

The Exhibitors

Hollywood, April 11.

WITH a view toward knowing what the hinterland critics have to say of that crop of flickers now on their third and fourth runs, we turn to that department in the Motion Picture Herald, where the small town Barnums write the truth about Hollywood's "terrific — colossal" productions. Their remarks are different from the literature of the trailers.

The biggest box office draw today, without any doubt, is little Shirley Temple. She can appear in any picture and the girl in the box office will be busy. On a movie marquee there is no picture actor or actress who will be billed above her. This comment from Exhibitor M. R. Harrington, of Clatskanie, Oreg., is what they all have been writing in. On this occasion, the title of the picture happens to be "Bright Eyes." Harrington writes: "Brought people into the theater whom we had never seen before, and how they raved. The biggest little star is right."

• • • •

But merely to show you how fickle the public is and how a kid star outgrows fame, there is "Peck's Bad Boy" with Jackie Cooper. He was once sensational, and now listen to what J. W. Noah, of Fort Worth, Tex., had to put on his program to get them in to see J. Cooper: "It was part of what we called our 'Five Feature Show,' with a Popeye cartoon, Joe Penner short, color cartoon, 'The Brave Tin Soldier,' and Bing Crosby in 'I Surrender, Dear.'"

That is why Fox is making Shirley Temple flickers with the same speed of a chain cigarette smoker.

• • • •

GRETA GARBO'S biggest draw these days is abroad, and it is because of her popularity in the foreign market that Metro can afford to pay her $290,000 for a flicker. The small towns—and that's for whom producers like to tell you they're really making the pictures—seem to be tiring of the Great Greta. Exhibitor Leon Bolduck of Conway, N. H., says of "The Painted Veil:" "Bood story, well played by all the cast. Garbo is not the draw she used to be."

Exhibitor A. E. Christian, of Monticello, Ky., commenting on the same picture, says: "My patrons commented favorably, but Garbo does not bring them in like she once did, and the picture did not draw."

"Garbo smiles" • • • but it is more important if the exhibitor smiles, and Greta doesn't seem to be agle to do it.

• • • •

When a movie producer spends plenty of money and time in an effort to make a fine picture, the small town exhibitor respects that producer and is with him. This is the strange comment of B. C. Brown, who played "David Copperfield" in his theater at Viroqua, Wis. He writes: "Has everything to make a great picture. Business below average, but that can be expected with a classic."

Odd that Brown didn't expect a classic to do business and yet at the same time was pleased with the picture and the reception his patrons gave to it. It proves that the small town theater owner is also interested in better pictures and is willing to try to help the industry by trying to educate his audiences. When the sticks are won over, the producer will have no argument for making formula pictures.

IT will take plenty of pioneer work to educate the small town Broadways, for there are towns with a movie house where some of the big flicker stars have never played on the screen. This may sound a little absurd, but here is the comment of Exhibitor Fred E. Pennell, of Decatur, Mich., concerning "Bordertown:" "This is the first time we have ever seen Muni and we hope we will see many more from this star." Muni, one of Warners' biggest male stars, is finally introduced to a picture audience.

Concerning "Limehouse Blues," Herman J. Brown, of Nampa, Idaho, is somewhat of a humorist without meaning to be. He writes: "Got by with a hard shove . . . Anna May Wong has been neglected and has to be put across again. It's remarkable how many clever people are neglected and how many dubs are thrust into every picture. There must be a clique in Hollywood. If you are born in Czechoslovakia and come from Europe they will waste years and millions trying to put you over, but if you are an American, God help you."

• • • •

An American like Anna May Wong? And yet Exhibitor Brown is correct. Miss Wong is one of the few movie actresses who was born in Los Angeles; she has never been to China and achieved her two greatest successes in flickers made in London.

Perhaps Anna May Wong should have hailed from China? She was hurried to this country from London to play the Chinese girl in "Limehouse Blues," and one day while emoting on the set Miss Wong was told that she didn't look Chinese enough. Miss Wong has a sense of humor and answered that with a little make-up she believed she could appear to look Oriental.

Bound Body in River Held Hit-Run Victim

Elkton, Md., April 11 (AP).—Cecil County police today had been unable to discover any clews to the identity or the manner of death of a Negro man whose wire-wrapped, weighted body was found in the Bohemia River near here Tuesday.

Police have been unable to determine whether the man was murdered or was victim of a hit-run driver. Both legs, both arms and the collar bone were fractured and there was a compound fracture of the skull. Police are inclined to the theory that he was struck by an automobile or truck and that the driver wrapped the body in wire, weighted it with concrete blocks and threw it into the river.

Powell's Triple in 7th Brings Nats 3-2 Victory Over Dodgers

This Morning . . .

With Shirley Povich

YOU could have knocked Bucky Harris over with the proverbial feather that January day in Tampa, Fla., back in 1924 when he opened a special delivery letter from Clark Griffith informing him that he was being offered the management of the Washington Ball Club. It was a promotion from thin ice to the saddle.

POVICH.

Harris had just been called on the carpet for what Griffith thought was a violation of his contract. He had been playing basket ball up around Utica, N. Y., and getting $500 a month for it, two games a week, when Griffith learned about it. Harris never did learn how Griffith found him out, but traced the news to his appearance in Washington for a New Year's Eve party with a shiner decorating his right eye. That, he believes, gave Griffith suspicions.

Anyway, Griffith telephoned him at Utica and asked Harris if he had been playing basket ball. "Yes, sir," Harris replied truthfully.

"Well, don't you know it's in your contract that you can't play basket ball in the off season?" Griffith demanded. "You've got to quit it, understand?"

"All right, Mr. Griffith," replied the young second baseman, "but it's not in my contract. Not my new contract. You put the clause in there last year, but you forgot it when I signed up for next season, so don't blame me."

BUT Griffith would have none of it. He summoned the young second baseman to Washington and ordered him to quit the game. "Don't you know a ball player can not participate in sports the year round and give his best to baseball?" he demanded. "Playing basket ball on those hard floors will take five years off your baseball career. Your legs are bound to go back on you. Now mind me."

"Yes, sir," replied Harris meekly.

"Well," said Griffith. "You're going to Florida ahead of the team to get in shape. Mike Martin's leaving for Tampa next week to fix up the diamond and you're going with him. Now, rest up, because you've got to be in shape when the season starts, hear me?"

Harris heard, with great interest, but just as he was envisioning four months in Florida at the club's expense, Griffith cut in with: "And one more thing. Don't take your golf clubs." Bucky's dreams collapsed, but he remembered that Utica was still under 2 feet of snow and that Florida was warm. It wasn't such a bad break. He left for Tampa with Martin shortly after New Year's.

Donie Bush had been fired as manager of the Washington club, and like the fans, Harris and Martin, at Tampa, speculated on the identity of the new manager of the Nats. They agreed that the late Kid Gleason of the White Sox would be the ideal choice. Just the man the team needed, smart, an old head, and full of dash and fire. They had heard that Griffith was considering Gleason.

TWO weeks after he arrived at Tampa, Harris was awakened by a knock on the door of his hotel room. It was a bell hop with a special delivery letter. Bucky flipped the boy two bits, laid the letter on the night table, and went back to sleep. Two hours later he awoke to read it and read it again and again. Griffith was offering him the job of managing the Washington club.

Bucky pounded his head against the bed posts to ascertain if it was really no dream. His heart was still leaping and his head was hurting, so he deduced that it was true. Ye gods.

In his letter, which Griffith had written himself in long hand, refusing even to divulge his plan to his secretary, the Nats' owner asked Harris if he would take the job. Fairly enough he pointed out the responsibilities and the likelihood that it would handicap Harris' playing, probably shorten his playing career. Did he want the job? He would call Harris by long-distance telephone that evening. He must know Harris' decision immediately as other prospects were in mind.

THAT day was six months long to Bucky. The morning dragged like a half century. The afternoon, it seemed, would never pass. Of lunch, there was none. Dinner was a farce. He sat in his room awaiting the call for four hours. Finally a ring of the telephone. Washington was calling.

It was Griffith. Harris could hear him plainly. "Well, what was his decision, Griffith wanted to know. Did he want the job. Harris screamed a frenzied "You bet!" into the telephone's mouthpiece. Griffith couldn't hear him. It was a bad connection. "Yes, yes, yes," despite the fact that on the Tampa end of the phone Harris could hear shouted Harris. It was no go. His words were lost upon Griffith plainly.

With a job in his lap, Harris was unable to accept it. A frantic pounding on the receiver hook did not help matters. He was cut off. Griffith did not know his answer. Bucky railed at the telephone, to no avail. And then he bethought himself. He addressed telegrams to Griffith's home, Griffith's office, Griffith's club and Mrs. Griffith. They all read the same. He'd take that job.

Get Set for Ride in the Wagon! Golf Ball Business Goes Nutty

By Paul Gallico.

A Special Correspondent.

NEW YORK, April 11.—One is a sucker, one concludes after mature reflection, to waste one's best years in literary endeavor when with a proper application of brains and experience a commercial career is the short cut to wealth, ease and peace. This article is in the nature of a farewell to my, for so many years, slightly tired but nevertheless faithful public.

A little magazine called Golfing, published in Chicago by a friend of mine named Herb Graffis, has given me the impetus to cease this futile dabbling with nouns, pronouns, verbs and adjectives and turn my talents into the proper channels. Thumbing through his magazine I learn that to get the greatest distance out of your golf ball it must have a liquid center.

On the next page I find that the great "go far" golf ball acknowledges its superlative flight to a solid center. On page three, my almost unbelieving eyes read that the thing that makes the such-and-such ball outdrive any other is the center of pure honey, and so help me, on page four, the core of this-and-that ball is dry ice.

Obviously, I am blessed with an imagination, or I would not be in this business, and, just as obviously, my imagination is going to waste and is a lot better than that of contemporary golf ball manufacturers. If I could not think up something better to put inside a golf ball than honey or dry ice, I would never want to make another dollar. And so farewell to the alphabet.

I am forming the "Paul William Gallico What-Will-You-Have-in-the Center-of-Your-Golf-Ball Co., Inc." Shares will be on the market shortly, and inside of a year I will be a member of the 5 per cent that owns 85 per cent of all the country's wealth, a class that I have always aspired to, but never expected to reach within my lifetime, at least as long as I stuck to stringing words together into sentences. The first product of the company, practically ready for the market now, is the caviar-center ball, a long-flying golf ball with a center of genuine Russian malossol caviar (unsalted).

Everybody knows that caviar is the most expensive and delicious substance in the world. Then why wouldn't it be a fine center for a golf ball selling for $2 apiece. Nobody has ever thought of that before. As a companion ball we are offering at $1 the oyster ball, with a small bluepoint oyster at the core.

We experimented with Cape Cods and Chincoteagues and find them a little too large. But a small bluepoint makes a perfect center. There is nothing quite as calm and self-possessed as an oyster, and the very thought of this placid, gentle bivalve embedded in his golf ball

Artillery Poloists Win First Battle

New York, April 11 (AP).—The 124th Field Artillery trio from Chicago gained the first leg on the National Low-Goal Indoor Polo championship tonight, trouncing the Squadron A team, 8½ to 4½ in the first of a best two out of three game series in the Squadron A Armory.

O'Mahoney's Whip Stops R. Dusek

Irishman Out-Roughs Rough Foe to Win in 16 Minutes.

3,400 See Struggle at Auditorium; Szabo Winner on Foul.

By Bill McCormick.

DANIEL O'MAHONEY, the Irish mat matinee idol, whipped Rudy Dusek for the third time last night—Irish whipped him in the Auditorium in 16 minutes before a record crowd of 3,400 Irishmen and 100 who came to root for Rudy.

Danno subjected the squat Nebraskan to just about every indignity known to the mat before finally cracking the whip over him. He half-nelsoned him, he full-nelsoned him, he kicked him in the chest, he snipped away at his midsection with a body scissors and punished him in other ways that were highly satisfactory to the vast majority. All in all, Rudy had a very rough voyage.

Green Tights, He Wore.

The O'Mahoney entered the ring wearing green tights, a silly expression and a brand new cauliflowered ear on the port side of his handsome Oirish physog. Besides the newly scrambled ear, Danny brought a new-to-him habit of socking his opponent with the elbow.

O'Mahoney kicked Rudy soundingly in the chest early in the exhibition, then slapped him down with the open hand. Rough-neck Rudy strove mightily to hammer the Oirsher down with both fists, but Danno seemed to have perfected a defense for Dusek's wallops. Danno's newly massaged ear had not yet been touched in the rough milling.

O'Mahoney caught Rudy in a full nelson, then banged his head against the floor there times—to the great detriment of the floor boards. Ruddy slapped Dannie's face slightly there times and O'Mahoney retaliated with three elbow plops which he wound up and tossed in slow motion exactly as though he were tossing a 16-pound hammer.

O'Mahoney's mashed potato ear still was untouched.

O'Mahoney clamped on a body scissors, but Rudy wiggled out of the ropes, then took time out to argue with the Irishman's manager, Jack McGrath, who was coaching in Gaelic from the sidelines.

The lad from Erin tied both of Rudy's feet in knots, then couldn't decide what to do with the nasty Nebraskan. Dusek solved his problem for him by crawling through the ropes.

Came the Climax.

Then came the climax. Rudy cut away at O'Mahoney's midsection with a body scissors. Danno wiggled out in some manner known only to heaven and the wrestling fraternity, then drove Rudolph around the ring with elbow blows to the head. As Rudy staggered back under the teerriffic impact of the vicious wallops, the O'Mahoney grabbed his right arm, snapped him back in the Irish whip, then over his head in a flying mare. Once more Danno snapped the whip and dumped Rudy to the canvas head first. Then, me lads, 'twas but the work of a twinkling for him to climb aboard Dusek's prostrate form while Ruferee Benjamin Bortnickovitch counted "ein, tsvei, drei" in his native tongue.

The crowd of 3,500 set a new high for indoor crowds at the Auditorium this winter for either wrestling or boxing. The previous high was set on the occasion of O'Mahoney's last appearance here, when the Irish Free State chumpion tossed Fred Grobmier in a few minutes.

O'Mahoney's quick finish of Dusek dismissed school 37 minutes ahead of the NRA closing time, as the last grunt reverberated into the rafters at exactly 10:23 p. m.

McKay Disqualified.

Sandor Szabo, the Hungarian rhapsody, won on a disqualification from Pat McKay, of Memphis, after 17 minutes of blood and thunder in a preliminary scheduled for 30 minutes. Patrick insisted upon using a strangle hold after having drawn numerous warnings from Referee Jim McNamara and finally was waved from the ring.

Andy Rasher, the indomitable Indian who fast is becoming Washington's Nofi 1 wrestling hero, labored 30 minutes to a draw with Dick Daviscourt, the colorful Californian, in a highly satisfactory preliminary.

In a comical opener, Count Andre Dunaev, a Rooshian, no less, pinned Jack Brennan, of New York, in 7 minutes.

Jack Donocan, a California Irishman, tossed one Jean Ledeaux, of Canada, in 15½ minutes of a semifinal schedule for three-quarters of an hour. The French-Canadian was a willing and a colorful performer, but, by gar, wot you suppose zat Donovan he do? He wrap his feets aroun' Ledeauz kneck, zen he flop heem ovair, wan, two, t'ree tam—an' poor Jean, he so tarred he just lay dere whahl zat Irishman he jump on top of heem and ze referee he count wan, two, t'ree ovair heem.

Baer-Braddock Bout Likely In June

Climax to Varied Garden Rumors Is Expected Next Monday.

By the Associated Press.

NEW YORK, April 11.—It looks as if there's nothing left to arranging the next heavyweight championship fight except three days' delay, a few more arguments and the formal announcement Monday.

In all probability, James J. Braddock, the Jersey Irishman, who gave Art Lasky the licking of his life, will square off against Max Baer with the big title at stake in Madison Square Garden's Long Island Bowl midway through June.

"We've got the negotiations down to a point now where the Garden has offered me 15 per cent, and I'm asking for 17½," whispered Joe Gould, Braddock's manager, in a confidential tone that could be heard from Times Square to Columbus Circle. "If I have to, I'll give in, and the match is made. We ain't proud."

Announcement Waits.

The Garden, punch drunk from the toughest opposition it has faced since Humbert Fugazy annoyed Tex Rickard for a few seasons with outdoor promotions, isn't ready to announce it has borrowed Braddock for the title match from Mike Jacobs, Rickard's earliest New York associate, who has tied up Barney Ross, Jimmy McLarnin, Lou Ambers, Baer for a September match, Primo Carnera and Joe Louis, along with Braddock.

The situation is complicated by recurring rumors that the Garden again is open to bids for its boxing privileges, and that the wind up of the Garden's ten-year domination of the heavyweight title situation with Baer's completion of his contract with them in June, also will wind up Jimmy Johnston's turbulent career as head of the boxing department.

Talks to Schmeling.

Things will come to something of a head Monday, when the Garden must name Baer's opponent under the terms of the contract. Johnston talks daily to Max Schmeling, former champion, in Berlin, seeking him as Baer's opponent, but the German seems to have broken with his American manager, Joe Jacobs, and couldn't very well come over anyway because he has signed for another match with Paulino Uzcudun, his favorite chopping block, in Berlin in July.

"I'm not going to do any talking until Monday," says Johnston stubbornly. "I'm going to keep after Schmeling. If Baer doesn't take one of those European offers, I still think the German will come over here."

Jacobs to Chicago.

He was all alone in that thought, however, as Mike Jacobs, the promoter, headed for Chicago to iron out with Barney Ross details for a lightweight title test against Ambers here late in May and a welterweight championship battle with Jimmy McLarnin the third week in July.

The boxing commission has given the Garden until Tuesday to announce Baer's opponent in June and will award the outdoor dates then.

Dixie Howell Badly Hurt by Batted Ball

By the Associated Press.

LYNCHBURG, Va., April 11.—"Dixie" Howell, famous football star of the University of Alabama's Rose Bowl champions, now a rookie with the Detroit Tigers baseball team, was injured seriously today when a line drive struck him on his right temple.

Carried to Lynchburg Hospital, where attendants watched his condition closely for fear of a brain hemorrhage, Howell was conscious and in extreme pain, but later became more cheerful as the pain subsided. X-ray pictures disclosed a fractured malar bone, but full findings of the pictures were not immediately determined.

Howell was hit by a ball batted by Johnny Mize, Cincinnati first baseman, just before an exhibition game between Detroit and the Cincinnati Reds. Practically the entire right side of his face and head was injured by the terrific blow.

Carried from the field, Howell was taken to Lynchburg Hospital and placed under care of Dr. John W. Devine, who said it might be several days before extent of the rookie's injuries could be determined.

Attendants said that even under most favorable conditions it might be necessary to keep the injured youth in hospital for at least two weeks.

Dr. Devine said Howell suffered intensely from shock until he was given anodyne. A constant watch was being kept at his bedside.

Several days will elapse, the physician said, before it can be determined if there is a bone depression. If so, he said, an operation will have to be performed, disfiguring the youths face. If there is no depression, Dr. Devine expected the bone to heal naturally.

Howell was in fairly good spirits several hours after the accident and talked with persons in his room. He told of his recent visit to Hollywood and offer of a motion picture contract, whcih he refused.

Howell rose to the peak of football fame when he led Alabama to victory over Stanford in the last Rose Bowl game with an amazing exhibition of forwrad passing.

Mickey Cochrane, manager of Detroit's American League champions, regarded Howell as a fine prospect although the youngster was slated to be farmed out this season to Beaumont of the Texas League for more seasoning.

During the spring Cochrane experimented with Howell in several positions. He came to the Tigers as an outfielder but Cochrane sought to convert him into an infielder and tried him out at both shortstop and third base.

He was regarded as one of the South's outstanding football backs—an accurate passer, a fine kicker and a good runner. The passing combination of Howell to Don Hutson was nationally famous last fall. Against Stanford in the Rose Bowl game on New Year's Day Howell enjoyed a field day. He scored two touchdowns, one on a 67-yard run, and his passing to Hutson and others was deadly.

2 Homers Help Tigers Down Reds, 6-3

Greenberg and Rogell Hit for Circuit; Bridges Gives 3 Hits.

By the Associated Press.

LYNCHBURG, Va., April 11.—The Detroit Tigers reached Al Hollingsworth for six hits and, aided by an error, turned back the Cincinnati Reds here this afternoon, 6 to 3, in a game called at the end of the sixth inning.

Greenberg hit a home run for the Tigers in the second and in the third, Rogell drove out one with two men on bases, after Myers' error, which would have retired the side.

Whitehill Is Victorious In Duel

Local Boy's Blow Scores 2 Runs; He Tallies on Stone's Single.

By Shirley Povich.

LOCAL BOY makes good!

Plucked from Washington sandlots five years ago and seasoned in the minor leagues, Jake Powell rapped out a three-base hit to left center field which echoed in a 3-to-2 victory for the Nats over the Brooklyn Dodgers yesterday before a handful of fans who braved the biting breeze.

The Dodgers were winging toward a 2-0 victory in the seventh inning on the impetus of the pitching of young Frank Lemanske, fresh from Davenport, Iowa, in the Mississippi Valley League, when Powell's bat put an end to his shut-out dreams.

Lemanske began to waver when he flicked Lyn Lary's shirt with a pitch and walked Pinch Hitter Freddie Sington. Fred Schulte produced the first out with a fly to center field, but the speed of Buddy Myer reprieved the Nats' hopes. Myer grounded to Frey, forcing Sington at second, but averted a double play by beating Frey's throw to first by the proverbial eyelash.

Then it was that Powell, bidding for a regular job with the Washington club, clinched the assignment by slamming the triple that was the pivotal blow of the ball game. Powell's hit was a whistling liner between Taylor and Bordagaray, and Myer, on first, romped home behind Lary with the tying run.

Slipper King Takes Bowie's Feature Race in Blanket Finish

Daily Double Bets Bring $267.90

Douglas F., Canrock in Combination; Choice Fail to Figure.

By Walter Haight.

SLIPPER KING, owned and operated by L. Haymaker, was on the winning end of the most thrilling race of yesterday afternoon's Bowie program. In a three-nose finish, Slipper King slipped up to nip Chartres and Motley in what appeared to be a three-horse "dead heat" to some observers. A keen factor the last time he went to the post at long odds, Slipper King was the medium of some concerted play just before the betting closed and the son of Infinite was installed second choice. He paid a $7.60 mutuel.

The improvement in the weather conditions served to bring out a crowd of some 8,000 and the play on the daily double showed a decided increase, both in total betting and in the mutuel paid. The winning combination was that of Douglas F. and Canrock and the proposition paid a $267.90 mutuel. A total of $15,932 wes sent into the double pool and the winning figure was one of the smallest shown on the "if" board after Douglas F. won. Four combinations would have paid more than $1,000, with Douglas F.-Rockrim topping the list at $4,912.30.

Manager Bill Fails.

The feature race was a Class C graded handicap, disguised as the Shirley Temple Handicap, and it drew a field of eight to contest over the mile and 7 yards route. Manager Bill was prominent in the betting and in holding up the start, but he failed to figure thereafter.

Jockey "Mouse" Peters, the Nation's leading rider last year, held Slipper King off the pace set by Long Bit until that one had run himself into the ground and then moved up, along with Motley and Chartres. The last-named, the medium of a coup at Tropical Park in which a battery played a leading part, had Gilbert in the saddle. The three ran as a team with the mutuel board in back of them, but Slipper King had the jump left that brought victory.

Douglas F., a field horse, scored an easy victory in the first race, a sprint of 6 furlongs. Apprentice C. Phillips sent his mount to the front at the head of the stretch and bounced him along to the finish line two lengths in advance of Kalola. Sun Cloister was third in the field of a dozen. Justa Teacher and Ethan Allen, a pair of Charles Town horses, battled for the early pace, but dropped out of it when the real test came. The winning field paid a $20.40 mutuel. Playfole, the favorite, was a disappointing fourth from a slow beginning.

Bright Don Scores.

Bright Don, claimed the other day by the B. B. Stable, scored a front-running victory in the second race. Coucci rode the winner and hustled every inch of the way in contrast to some disinterested riding on the part of Lynch on Hogan's Fox and Merritt on Witan. The mutuel was $10. Bright Don was a disappointing favorite in his previous outing.

The favorite players and those who hooked up Galla in the daily double were shocked as Galla was fourth in the juvenile sprint race. The laurels went to Canrock by a nose decision over Starborough, of the Howe Stable entry, in a duel between Earl Porter and Bobby Merritt. Free Spirit was third. Galla had no excuses after holding a lead from the start to approaching the stretch. Canrock paid $16.

Gifted Lady, which awoke here at large odds last out, made it two in a row in the fourth race. Jockey Lynch was away well with the filly and raced Fan into defeat. In the stretch Master Lad, the odds-on favorite, made a threat, but Gifted Lady was not to be caught. Fan staggered into the third money. The winner paid $6.90.

Ramus Takes Sixth.

Ramus, supposed to be a sprinter, won the sixth race, by the simple method of getting so far out in front that he could not be caught. Wahoo closed like an express train to take the place from Sun Abbot. Ramus paid $19.40.

DOUGLAS F. going in his best form and in the thick of contention in the early racing, wore the leaders down when reaching the home stretch, sprinted into a clear lead, but was tiring at the end and had to be kept under urging. KALOLA challenged stoutly in the last three furlongs and came gamely when reaching the home stretch. SUN CLOISTER bettered his position on the outside after being slow to settle in his stride and finished strong. PLAYFOLE broke slowly and could never reach a forward position. JUSTA TEACHER and ETHAN ALLEN were used up setting the pace. MANUAL broke fast, but could not engage the leaders. LULU LITE was never a factor. PRINCE DRAKE was done early and did not favor the going.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—BRIGHT DON, $10.40, $4.90, $2.80; HOGANS FOX, $5.10, $3.00; WITAN, $2.30.

BRIGHT DON, hustled into the lead soon after the start, showed good speed and ability in the footing and withstood a stout drive to withstand HOGANS FOX. Later raced on the inside from the beginning, responded to punishment and held on strongly. WITAN went close up with the leaders and held on gamely after making a strong bid entering the home stretch. ROSS was steered wide and closed full of run. RAYCART moved up stoutly midway of the turn, but failed to rally under punishment when the real issue came. LIEBCHEN was held safe throughout.

THIRD RACE—Four furlongs. Purse, $800; claiming. For maiden 2-year-olds. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 3:44. Off at 3:52½. Winner, E. K. Bryson's ch. c. Two-dollar mutuels paid—CANROCK, $16.00, $8.30, $5.10; ‡STARBOROUGH, $5.70, $3.70; FREE SPIRIT, $4.00.

CANROCK, rushed into contention while on the outside, responded willingly to pressure when straightened into the home stretch, drew on even terms with STARBOROUGH, then outfinished the latter under stiff pressure. STARBOROUGH, prominent from the beginning raced GALLA into defeat and held on determinedly in the closing drive. FREE SPIRIT, unruly at the post, lost considerable ground entering the home stretch, but closed full of run. GALLA was stoutly handled from the beginning, saved ground, but tired in the last furlong. STUMBLE was gaining steadily during the final stages. MASKED BELLE came with a belated rush after being shuffled back soon after the start. DARLING PAT was racing gamely during the stretch run. NAHALLAC displayed early foot. BE JUST was never a factor.

Two-dollar mutuels paid—GIFTED LADY $6.90, $3.00, $2.10; MASTER LAD, $2.60, $2.10; FAN, $2.10.

GIFTED LADY was hurried into the lead when reaching the first turn, raced FAN into submission, saved ground to open up a winning lead when straightened into the home stretch, then held MASTER LAD safe under light urging. MASTER LAD, steadied along back of the leaders until reaching the final elbow, was shaken up vigorously, but could not menace the winner during the closing drive. FAN went strongly for the first six furlongs then weakened. STATION BELLE was held safe throughout. ONLY FOOLIN was never a factor. MERRY BUD was done after five furlongs.

SLIPPER KING, restrained back of the pacemaker until reaching the final turn, responded nicely when placed to a drive and, closing stoutly, was up in the concluding strides. CHARTRES bettered his position on the outside, was placed to punishment and finished in determined fashion. MOTLEY worked his way up on the inside, came through a wide opening to take command at the final pole, but weakened right ta the end. PRINCE ABBOT was gaining slowly after being outrun early. MANAGER BILL went forwardly until reaching the home stretch, then faltered under a drive. FOUR SPOT was never dangerous. LONG BIT stopped after going easily while setting the pace. MISS CAREFUL dropped back steadily.

SIXTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won easily; place, driving. Went to post at 5:29. Off at 5:34 Winner, Miss L. C. White's b. g. Two-dollar mutuels paid—RAMUS, $19.40, $10.60, $4.00; WAHOO, $14.30, $4.50; SUN ABBOT, $2.50.

RAMUS, going in greatly improved form sprinted into a commanding lead without effort, saved ground throughout and was strongly restrained when reaching the finish. WAHOO, placed on the outside for the start after acting fractiously, trailed far back for six furlongs, settled in his stride and closed an immense gap. SUN ABBOT followed closest to the winner most of the trip, but weakened fast in the closing drive. FIELD GOAL was unable to threaten. BRAD was outrun. FRIEND WHITEY stopped to a walk.

SEVENTH RACE—One and one-sixteenth miles. Purse, $800; claiming. For 4-year-olds and upward. Start good. Won driving; place, same. Went to post at 6:03. Off at 6:04½. Two-dollar mutuels paid—WALKALONG, $11.90, $4.60, $3.60; AXENTEA, $3.40, $2.70; SIMPLE SINGER, $4.30.

WALKALONG sluggish at the start, secured racing room on the inside to reach a forward position, swung to the outside of the leaders when approaching the home stretch, then closed stoutly to get up in the last few strides. AXENTEA, rated close up in the early running, responded nicely when put to a drive, wore HARKY down inside the closing furlong and held on tenaciously. SIMPLE SINGER closed full of run after being messed about early. HARKY displayed good speed while setting the pace, but tired after saving much ground. DON'T BLUSH went prominently and had no excuses. FAIR MOLE stopped. JIM MOSS quit early.

Indigo Is Seen Middleburg Favorite

Eight Steeplechasers Will Go to Post Tomorrow in Cup Classic.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

MIDDLEBURG, Va., April 11.—Indigo, a gray gelding from the Northwood Stables, rules a prime favorite among local race fans for the fifteenth annual running of the famed Middleburg Hunt Cup on the Glenwood race course on Saturday.

This son of Stefan the Great, out of Malachite, ran a close second to Paul Mellon's Drinmore Lad at Camden two weeks ago, when the latter beat the record by 2 4-5 seconds to win the Carolina Cup. Lad is not entered in this race, but is scheduled for a flat race on the second day. Indigo was the winner of the Chilton, a 3-mile timber race on this course last fall.

The race is expected to be keenly contested in view of the past records made by the eight top steeplechasers listed for the feature. The entries, besides Indigo, are Mrs. Sommerville's Carioteer, winner of the Carolina Cup in 1934 and of the top race at Pinehurst this spring; Mrs. Vadim Makarof's Gigolo, winner of the Piedmont Hunt Cup at Llangollen last fall; Mrs. Simon Patterson's Career, winner of the Raymond Belmont Memorial at Middleburg last fall; Flying Horse Farm's The Prophet, a permanent winner of the Virginia Gold Cup; Paul Mellon's Chatterplay, a former show-ring jumper; Alvin Untermyer's Bagatelle and C. E. Perkins' Laguna Seca.

Field Cut to Ten.

Star Wink and The Stag II, both consistent winners of flat races, are among those listed for the Sunny Bank, a 1¼-mile turf race, first on the program, which will be called at 1:30 p. m. The scratching of Graham Grant's Omarcou has reduced the field in this race to ten.

Mrs. Lewis A. Parks' Walnut Creek is scratched in the William Skinner Memorial, a 2½-mile timber race, reducing the field to five. Two scratches in the Rosehill, a 3-mile timber race, Mrs. Norman D. R. Whitehouse's Seth Stranger and John E. Hughes' Main Roe, leaves a field of seven to go to the post. Graham Grant's Long Prince is scratched in the Loudoun Plate, a 2-mile brush race, and in the Three Oaks, a mile on the flat, Mrs. Paul Mellon's Bad Bob, Paul Mellon's Catalano and J. E. Ryan's Aughrim Boy have been scratched.

Steeplechasers Arrive.

A real racing atmosphere pervaded the Glenwood race course today with the arrival of crack steeplechasers for the races on Saturday and Wednesday. On hand were racers in the Mellon string that arrived under the care of J. E. Ryan, gentleman rider and trainer, the Northwood Stables entries, Alvin Untermeyer's string under care of Randolph Duffy, and others.

Six races will be run on Saturday, two flat, two brush and two timber events. The entrance fee of 50 cents will benefit the Loudoun County Hospital. The judges are Fletcher Harper, M. F. H., Orange County Hunt; Amory Carhart, M. F. H. Warrenton Hunt, and W. H. Lipscomb, M. F. H., Loudoun Hunt.

Golf Ball Trade Goes Screwy In Big Way

Why Not Add Rye, Caviar to Other Matter Used for Centers.

But our company expects to go much further than that. The average golf ball manufacturer shortsightedly sells you a ball meant to last you for 18 OR MORE holes of play. WE will sell the public a different ball, a different center for EVERY hole. No two golf holes are alike in distance and conformation. Then, why should you play it with the same ball with the same type of center. Absurd! We mean to educate the golfer to choose his golf balls and their centers with the same care and discrimination that he selects his dinner.

Our salesmen, attractively costumed as waiters will greet him on the first tee with dozens of boxes of variegated center balls and a menu—"An appetizer for the first hole, sir; our smoked salmon center ball, or Florida fruit cup. Or our hors d'oevres ball, a little of everything in the center. Very good, sir. A little soup? Our potage a la Reine center ball, or a little clear turtle. Yes, sir; the clear soup center.

"For the third hole we are recommending our filet-of-sole-in-white-wine-sauce ball. The roast duck is very nice today, too, sir. Or would you care for a morsel of rare beef? We are making a ball with a Chambertin or Liebfraumilch center if you care for a light wine. Ah! on a diet, you say, sir? Have you ever tried our crackers and milk center ball? Very good, sir. Will you have a demitasse center for the eighteenth?"

Now, I maintain that makes sense, and is proper commercial exploitation. We are going to put out a fine corn, rye, Scotch or bourbon center as well as a golf ball with a dime in the center for Scotchmen. We will take your order and make up your golf ball with any center you wish—a lock of your girl's hair, your mother-in-law's picture in miniature, baby's first tooth or a seidlitz powder.

Especially recommended are our olive oil centers, will not mix with water, our fish ball for Friday, and our highballs for Saturday afternoons. Watch charms, Masonic emblems, lucky pieces and small keepsakes placed in your own golf balls at reasonable prices. Anything for business.

Dear Al: Bowie Race Track, April 11.

Clocker Mike always has taken a personal interest in the horse Wahoo. In fact, Wahoo put Clocker Mike on his feet a couple of seasons ago when he graduated from the maiden class. Yesterday, Mike put over his best-thing-of-the-day, Silver Slipper, and, looking for a place to parlay that $7, he picked out Wahoo in the sixth race. The horse has been right here on the grounds all winter. A little colored mosquito named Brooks had the mount. Mike frowned from ear to ear when Wahoo bucked and tossed and ended up by being placed on the outside stall gate. An assistant starter held on to Wahoo when the break came and the horse gave the others a 15-yard advantage. Mike raved. Along the back stretch Wahoo continued to drop back and Mike tore his hair. I'm not exaggerating when I say that Wahoo was a sixteenth of a mile from the front horse on the swing for the stretch. Mike offered Trainer Joe the ticket for a quarter, but Joe had eyes of his own. Mike was a whipped man. He turned his head away. "Look!" yelled Joe. Mike looked. He grinned. Wahoo was coming as if he were shot out of a gun. Not on the outside; not on the inside, but right through the middle of the field. Little Brooks was sitting sideways whipping like a demon. Mike was a wild man. Wahoo rushed over the line—but second. It was the daddy of all stretch runs in my book. Just too bad for Mike that the finish wasn't at the paddock gate. Wahoo would have won by four.

BILL.

First race—Evening Chimes barely missed winning a purse last out. Gets in a spot here that seems to suit and with Georgie Watson to do the riding I see no reason for mistakes. Flower Time may draw Coucci and will be there if the top one makes mistakes. Veritas for the show.

Second race—Advocate Junior is a cheap one at best, but he meets a field of common ones in this heat. Coucci is slated for the saddle assignment so I'm disregarding that 116 pounds. Lucky Turn and Volgadale for the other awards.

Third race—Mad Beth may make it two in a row for Coucci. This fellow ran an excellent race earlier in week and figures best. Vacillate will like track should it remain in an off position and may surprise. Royal Command is speedy now and has a fighting chance.

Fourth race—Zay was tipped last out and was a keen factor for part of the route. May stick it out today and defeat Dancing Doll, the one that looms as the favorite. Our Mae to show.

Fifth race—Canterboy gets a nice shift in the weight in this test against Sang Froid, winner of two races here. The last-named won the last time they met. Both have good riders. Chief Mourner has been knocking at the door, but like Hows Chances, he seems to be over his head.

Sixth race—Ahmed is the class of this field. Rather inconsistent, but this looks so easy, I expect no mistakes. Inferno Lad and Standout for the rest. Capt. Jerry's last was a disgrace.

Seventh race—Twidgets was close to a win last out at telephone numbers after some bad riding. Off that sprint, this one may upset the apple cart. Bird Lore and Fair Billy for the rest. Clocker Mike prefers Tristrap, another coming off a good sprint.

Eastern Track Team Faces Episcopal

Power Unknown Quantity, Six Letter Men From Nucleus of Squad.

A RATHER mysterious Eastern High track team will open the high school track and field season tomorrow afternoon against Episcopal High, of Alexandria. About the only thing anybody is sure of concerning the meet is that the Episcopal boys always take good care of themselves when it comes to cinder-path arguments. Episcopal smothered Eastern last year, 76 to 49.

Little or nothing is known of the exact strength of the Central team except that Coach Boyd has gone about the task of building it in a very business-like manner, in sharp contrast to the fact that it is his first track coaching experience.

Six lettermen gave the coach a fairly encouraging foundation, some of which has an interhigh championship ring to it. Ed Miller, who placed well in the high-jump last year, has been leaping around the 6-foot 3-inch mark, while John Carvelas, husky football center, who placed third in the shot-put event last year, is another sure point winner. He has been heaving the weight 42 and 43 feet.

Heider Counted On.

Coach Boyd describes Mel Heider, red-headed discus thrower, as another strong interhigh championship possibility. Allan Miller in the half-mile should be a distinct threat in that event. Although he has not been clocked this year for publication, he has been burning up the distance, according to his teammates. Bernie Copper, fast-traveling low-hurdle man, and Herb Lightfoot, a letterman in the high hurdles last year, form another pair of 1934 regulars back in uniform.

The former Tech basket ball coach has uncovered four promising milers in Bill Fox, Joe Craft, Joe Peaslee and Rag Graves, but only Bob Brand, fast football end, has shown much speed in the 440. Ral Bucca, Danny Carroll, Charles Buell and Albert Pepper loom as the sprinting strength.

While it also will be the first meet of the season for Episcopal, the team across the river is scarcely alarmed concerning Eastern's invasion. Capt. Boyd Hoxton, quarter-miler, and teammates have been working out for several months on a board track. Eastern has been practicing but three weeks.

Dettweiler (Georgetown Prep), defeated Russell (St. John's), 5 and 3; Parks (Georgetown Prep), defeated Gernam (St. John's), 3 and 2. Best ball—Georgetown Prep, 5 and 4.

Spaulding (Georgetown Prep), and Meyers (St. John's), tie. Horstman (St. John's) defeated Higgins (Georgetown Prep), 6 and 5. Best ball, St. John's, 5 and 4.

Hammersly, Alexandria, Allows Eastern No Hits, No Runs

Godfrey Also Stars in 2-0 Triumph

Hurler Strikes Out Six, Walks Four Men in 7-Inning Game.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

ALEXANDRIA, Va., April 11.—Eddie Hammersly, star Alexandria High School pitcher, gained baseball's hall of fame this afternoon by holding Eastern hitless as the Twins walked away with a 2-0 victory over the Washingtonians in a seven-inning game.

The only flaw in Hammersly's performance was the fact that he walked four men, which might be easily attributed to the intense cold. He struck out six batsmen.

Woody Godfrey, the Twins' diminutive catcher and captain, shared the spotlight with Hammersly as he scored one of the two runs and drove in the other. In the fourth inning Godfrey singled to start the inning, stole second and came home on a single by Johnny Nugent.

Godfrey got his second successive hit in the fifth after Varney had singled and advanced to second on McMenamin's sacrifice. The blow was good for two bases and Varney came in just ahead of Jacob's throw from deep center field with the final marker of the game.

Joe Sullivan, All-High pitcher for Eastern, turned in a good performance, and the eight hits he granted were kept fairly well scattered.

Washington and Lee High School combined 13 hits and 2 costly alien misplays to defeat Episcopal High School this afternoon at Hoxton Field, 8 to 3. It was the first game of the season for the hosts.

"Howdy" Preston, on the mound for the Generals, pitched effective ball throughout and held the Episcopalians to four scratch singles.

The Generals took advantage of a walk, an error and a hit to score one run in the first inning, and added to their total as the game progressed. One run was scored in the third, three in the fourth and two in the fifth, at which point Gravatt, Episcopal starting pitcher, was removed. Bell, who replaced him in the sixth, was touched for one run in that frame.

Episcopal rallied mildly to score two runs in the fifth and one in the ninth.

Norfolk Expects To Retain Pennant

New Players Are Praised by Yankee Scouts.

By the Associated Press.

Norfolk, Va., April 11.—Manager Bill Skiff is taking the word of Yankee scouts that he has a first-class baseball team this year—in fact, a team good enough to retain its Piedmont League championship.

Most of the lads who won for him a year ago have gone the way of all good player, up to faster circuits, but Skiff has been assured, and he believes it, that he has a team that will make life miserable for the other five members of the league.

Skiff will choose his pitching staff from eight candidates: Millard Monney, of Fort Monroe; Edward Baratta, of New York; Joe Vitell, McKees Rock, Pa.; John Strayvis, Sayre, Pa.; Fred Shaffer, Mercer, Pa.; Joe Bethlem, Ray Ruff and Russell Brown, all of Rochester.

His first-string quartet of infielders is Howard Earp, Holly Springs, N. C.; Frank Oceak, Cliffside, Pa.; Andy Stravacos, New York City, and John Dudick, Cannonsburg, Pa.

Vance Formally Returns to Dodgers

Dazzy Vance, veteran of the National League pitching mounds, who first found fame with the Brooklyn Dodgers with whom he starred for ten years, yesterday signed again to pitch for Brooklyn after two seasons spent with the Reds and Cardinals. Manager Casey Stengel looks on as Property Man Comerford loans his back for the ceremony.

V. M. I. Teams Face Virginia Tomorrow

Special Dispatch to The Post.

LEXINGTON, Va., April 11.—Balked by the weather man in their scheduled track meet with Duke and baseball game with Vermont, the V. M. I. Cadets will open their varsity season on the diamond and track against University of Virginia teams here Saturday.

The freshman trackmen lost a close meet in the rain to Jefferson High School, of Roanoke, last week. They will join the varsity tracksters in tackling Cavalier Saturday. The double-header track meet will start at 1 p. m., and the Cadet and Cavalier ball teams will take over Alumni Field at 3:45.

Line-up in Doubt.

Coach Bill Raftery is still in doubt about his opening line-up. He has been dogged by a catcher jinx that may force him to bring in Marlin Bair from the outfield or rely on two inexperienced backstoppers, Morris Haas and Joe Keller. Bo McMillin, a veteran, broke a leg in spring football, Tony Merola, a good sophomore prospect, is no longer in school, and John Grasty, a reserve, has given up baseball in favor of his studies.

Raftery's untried infield probably will line up with Capt. Irvin Smith, last year's No. 1 pitcher, at second base, and Frank Raffo at first. One of two sophomores, Bill Kane or Joe Sherrard, will play shortstop, and Bill Church, another sophomore, or Wendell Rosch, a reserve last year, will cover third base.

Wayne Lugar to Hurl.

Wayne Lugar, sophomore right-hander, will pitch for the Cadets. Two veterans, Al Davis and John Penn, will be in the outfield. Their running mate will probably be a sophomore, Hugh Adams, or a relief pitcher, Alex Neal.

Coach Son Read's varsity trackmen are cheered by the prospect that Capt. Temple Ryland's broken foot has mended. The Cadet shot and javelin specialist may be able to compete. The rest of the Cadet runners and field men are in fair shape in spite of being short of outdoor work.

Teams holding membership in the league are P. O. S. of A., Knights of Pythias, I. O. O. F. (two teams), Woodmen of the World, Junior O. U. A. M., DeMolay Alumni and the Loyal Order of Moose.

Navy's Nine Plays Albany Senators

Exhibition Game Slated at Annapolis Today.

Annapolis, Md., April 11.—Local baseball fans are hoping for favorable weather tomorrow when Navy hooks up with the Albany Senators of the International League in an exhibition game at 4 o'clock.

The game will be the first of its kind in the last few years, although the Tars have, on occasions, faced the Washington Senators and Baltimore Orioles.

The Middies made a good start of their season a week ago, playing Harvard to a 3-to-3 tie and scoring a 1-to-0 victory over Vermont yesterday.

Wilt Named Manager Of Keyser's Ball Club

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Keyser, W. Va., April 11.—Arthur "Bob" Wilt was elected manager of the Keyser baseball club, of the Cumberland and George's Creek League, succeeding Dyke Shaffer, who declined an offer to pilot the Golden Knights this season.

Wilt has starred in soccer, basket ball and baseball for the past ten years, and was a member of the Keyser Golden Knights, champions of the Interstate Basket Ball League for 1934-35. Last fall "Bob" played with the Westvaco A. A. soccer eleven, champions of the Allegany County Soccer League.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Poffenberger Signed By Charleston Club

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Hagerstown, Md., April 11.—Elwood Poffenberger, star player for several seasons in the Washington County Baseball League, when he was with Williamsport, has signed a contract with the Charleston (W. Va.) Club to the Middle Atlantic League and has left to train with the club at Fridale, Va.

Poffenberger completed last season with the Charleroi team of the same league, where he was converted from an outfielder into pitcher and it was while there that a Detroit scout saw him and obtained him for Charleston, a Detroit farm.

Helen Waring Routs Jinx at Pinehurst

Trims Edith Quier to Gain Semifinals; to Meet Miss Glutting.

By the Associated Press.

PINEHURST, N. C., April 11.—Helen Waring, Pinehurst ace, overcame her North and South Women's Golf tournament jinx today, winning a place in the semifinals for the first time although she had qualified four times.

She eliminated Edith Quier, of Reading, Pa., 1 up, in the second round today and won the right to meet Charlotte Glutting, East Orange, N. J., ace who defeated Betty Abernathy, of Pittsburgh, 3 and 2.

In the other backet tomorrow will be Estelle Lawson, of Chapel Hill, N. C., who turned back Jean Bauer, Providence, R. I., 3 and 2, and Deborah Verry, of Worcester, Mass., who ousted Jane Cothran, of Greenville, S. C., 2 and 1.

Miss Glutting was four up at the turn today, after firing a 36 for the nine, but slumped on the home stretch and won only by halving the last three holes.

Miss Waring, whose victory was considered an upset, despite her long record of first-rank golf here, got the upper hand on the first two holes and never fell behind, although Miss Quier pulled up even on the fifth, only to fall back on the seventh and sixteenth.

Warrenton Meet To Have Flat Race

Fifth Event Changed Due to Public Demand.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Warrenton, Va., April 11.—Due to popular demand, the Agricultural Steeplechase, which is fifth on the card of the Virginia Gold Cup Association meeting, to be held here May 4, will be changed to a flat race of one mile and a half. The race will be known as the Agricultural Purse and the conditions will remain the same.

It is understood that entries for this year's meeting of the Virginia Gold Cup Association are coming in well and a crowd of at least 15,000 persons is expected. The new courses are being rapidly completed and should be in tip-top shape shortly.

Every jump is in full view of the spectators and the program is looked upon as one of the outstanding events of the season.

Richmond U.'s Golfers May Vie Here

16 Tests Are Scheduled; G. U. and C. U. Teams May Be Added.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

RICHMOND, Va., April 11.—University of Richmond golfers, rated one of the South's greatest links aggregations, are looking to a pair of Washington schools as possible opponents, it was announced today. A schedule of 16 matches has been drawn up, and Coach Fred W. Caylor said matches may be added with George Washington and Catholic U.

Richmond has just run up a victory over William and Mary in the season's opening match. Strangely enough, Riegel was again defeated by Aulick Burke, Indian star. Last year Burke trimmed Riegel in the State amateur semi-finals, one of the few occasions when Riegel failed to finish in front.

Plans call for participation in two tournaments, the Southern Intercollegiates and the National Intercollegiates. Southern and Northern tours are booked, and it is upon the latter that Richmond would add matches against the Washington schools.

The schdule:

April 16, Hampden-Sydney, here; 18, North Carolina, at Chapel Hill; 19, Davidson, at Davidson; 22, South Carolina, at Columbia; 23, Emory U., at Atlanta; 24, Georgia, at Athens; 25-26-27, Southern tournament; 30, Virginia, here.

May 1, Washington and Lee, at Lexington; 5, Virginia Tech, here; 7, Virginia, there; 11, Virginia Tech, at Blacksburg; 13, W. and L., here (tentative); 16, Yale, at New Haven; 17, Harvard, at Cambridge; 18, Temple, at Philadelphia.

Virginia's professional fighters—and fans have started adding, "if any"—have drawn a warning from Secretary Joe Bauers, of the State boxing and wrestling commission.

Bauers is greatly displeased with Norment Quarles and Freddy Wallmeyer in particular, and with a few others in general. Quarles sent word here that he doesn't intend to fight in a semifinal spot on Monday night's card, and he suggested tossing a coin to decide spots.

Wallmeyer at first signed a contract to meet Bob Turner, then decided he didn't want to go through with it. While in that mood, he said suspensions did not amount to anything. Later, he changed his mind and decided to meet Turner, after all.

"The Wallmeyer-Turner fight, which will be for the State middleweight title, is the one to have the main spot," said Secretary Bauers. "It looks to me like the fighters are trying to run too much of this business. All we want 'em to do is to fight. I intend to lay down the law when they weigh in Monday. They're getting a lot of fancy ideas. We'll do the thinking; they'll have enough trouble doing the fighting."

Nats Beat Dodgers On Powell's Triple

to score Powell with the run that won the ball game.

The Nats' 3-2 advantage was given unto the keeping of Rookie Leon Pettit in the last two innings, after Earl Whitehill quit the game, and Pettit distinguished himself by allowing only one hit.

He retired the Dodgers in order in the eighth, but Buddy Myer placed Pettit in difficulties in the eighth when he dropped Taylor's line drive for an error. The situation loomed ominous when Stripp got a lucky hit in Myer's direction while attempting to duck the pitch, and when Lopez laid down a sacrifice bunt the tying run was on third and the winning run on second, with only one out.

Pettit then pitched himself out of the hole admirably. He fell on his knees to stop Pinch Hitter Reis' drive and toss the ball to Bolton at home. Bolton and Travis ran Taylor down between third and the plate. Pettit relieved the situation completely by forcing Bordagaray to pop to Lary for the final out.

Whitehill Yields Only Five Hits.

Overshadowing even the Nats' victory in the estimation of Manager Bucky Harris was the impressive seven-inning tour of duty by Earl Whitehill, who returned to form with a five-hit performance, despite the cold weather. The southpaw's clever effort presages his nomination as the pitcher who will receive the assignment to work the opening game of the season on Tuesday.

Whitehill permitted the Dodgers only one legitimate run, that in the second inning, when Cuccinello doubled and scored on Taylor's single to right. Cecil Travis' two-base wild throw on Cuccinello's grounder in the fourth inning paved the way for Brooklyn's second run.

Whitehill was more effective as the game progressed, striking out two in the fifth inning and ending his labors with a flourish in the seventh by striking out Bordagaray and Frey at a time when Brooklyn had two men on base.

The first five of the Nats' seven hits off Lemanske were futile. Throughout the first six innings he tightened in the pinches, until Powell's triple shook the Brooklyn rookie loose in the seventh.

Alexandria, April 11.—Episcopal High School's tennis schedule for the remainder of the season was released today by Coach Reade. Fourteen macthes remain to be contested, 13 of them to be played on the Episcopal courts.

The netmen opened their season March 30, defeating Tech High, 9 to 0, and since then matches with Central, Western and Eastern have been canceled because of rain or wet grounds.

Captained by Don Lay and managed by Lum Wellford, the Episcopal team has gone through two seasons without defeat.

The schedule:

Hoya Golfers Defeated by Florida

Lynch Bows to Stark by One Up; Corcoran Loses at 19th.

TWO exciting matches, one of which went to the nineteenth hole, featured yesterday's victory of Florida University's golf team over Georgetown at Congressional Country Club, 3½ to 2½.

The big surprise of the day was Joe Lynch's defeat at the hands of William Stark, No. 1 Flordia player, 1 up.

With cold, raw weather prevailing, the eight contestants had to struggle for every shot.

Tied at the end of the 18 holes, Kenny Corcoran, of Georgetown, and John Singleton, of the Gators, played the nineteenth in virtual darkness before the Florida golfer won with a par five to the opponent's six.

Lee Wins Easily.

J. B. Lee, of Georgetown, easily defeated William Voigt, of Florida, 7 and 6, while Henry Toland, of Florida, triumphed over Joe Galvin, husky Hoya star, 3 and 2, in the same foursome in which Singleton turned back Corcoran. Florida won the best ball, 3 and 2.

Lynch and Lee defeated Stark and Voigt, 4 and 2, for the best ball.

Lynch, 1 up at the turn in his match with Stark, was 3 up and 4 to go, but dropped the next four holes to Stark's withering barrage of par golf. Stark did a 78 and Lynch a 79.

Va. Leading Davidson As Rain Halts Netmen

Sets won by the Virginians were Barclay over Phifer, 6—3, 9—7; Sloan over Elvry, 6—0, 2—6, 6—1; Taylor over Hornbeck, 6—3, 7—5, and Fishburne over Morrow 6—4, 6—2.

Old Line Nine Bows, 5-4, to Michigan

Willis' Fine Mound Work Futile as Maryland Drops 2d Game.

MARYLAND'S undefeated baseball team had to cut Johnny Gee, Michigan's 6-foot 8-inch pitcher, down to its size yesterday at College Park to retain its unblemished record. The Terps won, 5-4, scoring all of their runs in a hectic fifth inning.

Until he reached the fifth Gee had a no-hit, no-run game to his credit. His fast one, curve and change of pace were functioning perfectly. But those four flawless innings evidently removed quite a bit of starch from his make-up, and Maryland cleaned up.

Singles by Daly, Buscher, Sothoron, Stonebraker and Love, passes to McAboy and Keller and a couple of wild throws by Gee endeavoring to pick men off bases, contributed to his downfall. Maryland came out of the fifth with all of their runs and the ball game.

Vic Willis hurled for Maryland and turned in a five-hit performance for his second triumph of the season. Michigan got to him for a brace of runs in the third and singletons in the fourth and sixth, but Willis bore down in the closing innings and was invincible.

Singles by Williams and Ford, with a sacrifice sandwiched in between and followed by Lerner's doubles, gave the Wolverines their first runs of the game.

Homer by Archer Wins for St. John's.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Annapolis, Md., April 11.—St. John's College tucked away victory in its opening game of the newly organized Maryland Intercollegiate Baseball League today. Loyola College of Baltimore was the victim, 4 to 2.

The Johnnies put a brace of runs across in the opening stanza and the Baltimoreans evened the count in the fourth. Bluch Archer, St. John's heavy-hitting shortstop, sewed the game up in the seventh when he poled a long one over the fence in right center field for a homer, sending Downes in ahead of him. Both teams were weak with the stick, Loyola getting four safeties, to three for the Johnnies. Some snappy work afield was shown, Carney and J. Bracken, of Loyola, pulling a triple play, while Brooks, Rosenberg and Archer, of St. John's, figured in a double.

Silver Lining Fails to Lift Stock Prices

U. S. Smelting a Leader With Advance of 4½ Points to 108.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 11.—The financial district detected a silver lining in some of its clouds today but appeared to suspect the lining was only around the edges.

There was a minor rush for the silver mining issues when it was revealed that the Government was advancing its price for newly mined domestic metal to 71.11 cents an ounce from the old price of 64.64 cents, which had been effect since the nationalization of the white metal in August, 1934.

Shares of the few companies standing to benefit from higher silver prices were immediately bid up by traders, with extreme gains ranging from 1½ to 6 points each. United States Smelting was a leader with a gain of 4½ points at 108, while others lifting from 1 to 3 poinst or so included Cerro de Pasco at 47½, American Smelting at 36⅝, International Silver at 22½ and Howe Sound at 48⅞.

The boomlet in the silver shares, however, failed to engender any great enthusiasm for the balance of the list, and stocks were, on the average, a little lower at the finish.

Enthusiasm for some of the staples failed to spread into the great majority of stocks. The Associated Press average for 60 stocks was .2 of a point lower at 37.6. Turnover in the stock exchange was relatively restricted at 733,920 shares.

Wheat Surges Up 3⅝ Cents

Cotton Has Brisk Rise, Closing With Net Gains of 35 to 39 Points.

By the Associated Press.

Chicago, Ill, April 11.—Sensationally slashed government estimates of the United States 1935 winter wheat crop swept the wheat market excitedly upward today 3⅝ cents maximum.

The official crop figures showing unexpectedly immense damage done by dust and drought were generally taken as closing the chapter on a domestic winter wheat crop this year west of the hundredth meridian. One of the country's foremost unofficial trade experts said no important market interest was left now in the territory that is already wiped out so far as wheat is concerned, and that chief speculative attention hereafter would shift to crop developments east of the Missouri River and in the Central Plains area, as well as to spring wheat territory.

At the crest of today's wild advance, wheat attained a new peak price record for the season, but reacted on profit-taking and closed nervous 1⅝ to 2¼ cents above yesterday's finish, May 87⅞ to 89. Undoing of spreads made corn close ⅛ to 1 cent down, May 87¼ to 87⅜, with oats unchanged to 1¼ off and provisions 5 to 7 cents up.

Surprise over the Government's crop figures resulted in an overwhelming rush of orders to buy wheat. The stampede to purchase received added momentum from word of new dust storms.

Corn and oats reflected only temporarily startling upturns of wheat values.

A sudden tumble of more than 2 cents a bushel, however, from the day's top in corn prices was witnessed. During the quick collapse, which caught the market bare of aggressive support, not a few stop loss orders were forced into execution.

Succession of Strike Threats Now Held Part of Strategy to Frighten Congress, Administration Into Pushing Wagner Bill.

By a Special Correspondent.

New York, April 11.—A decidedly more hopeful feeling concerning prospects of industrial peace in major industries for the balance of this year is evident among industrialists here. Those who follow the subject of personnel relations quite closely are now far less concerned than they were a month ago that a renewed outbreak of major strikes will be seen over the next few months.

Strike threats continue, of course, in undiminished number. The threat of a general walkout in the soft coal industry has been laid on the shelf until June 16, but it will be revived at that time. The rubber controversy is far the most serious at the moment, with mediation by the Government reputedly the chief hope for an early amicable settlement.

Should a violent outbreak occur in the rubber industry, forces would be unloosed which might lead to a more general and protracted struggle.

The United Rubber Makers' Union has established a "united front" with the automobile unions affiliated with the A. F. of L. Conceivably, if feelings are stirred, a strike in one industry could precipitate a walkout in the other. As the end of the season of most active automobile production approaches, however, only a serious source of irritation, such as refusal of motor manufacturers to deal freely with representatives elected recently by employes under the auspices of the National Automobile Labor Board, would be likely to cause an actual walkout. The American Federation of Labor's affiliates have shown their present numerical strength in the industry as a whole is still too small to enable them to cause much trouble, unless a good weapon is fashioned and placed in their hands by employers' blunders or by the Government. The A. F. of L. has developed strength in a few isolated plants, and minor walkouts in these may be called to obtain specific concessions in such cases.

Little Interest Shown In Collective Bargaining.

The fact of the matter is that the elections held by the National Automobile Labor Board have revealed little interest on the part of the workers in collective bargaining. Accordingly, an appeal to them to strike merely to help employes in the rubber industry who seek to organize for this purpose would evidently meet with very little enthusiasm. Predictions by some American Federation of Labor spokesmen that a joint walkout would occur are being heavily discounted by automobile executives, therefore.

The fact that national labor union leaders are talking strikes in several major industries, and are making broad threats even where their numerical position is very weak, is interpreted by industrialists as part of a well-planned labor strategy. While leaders of the American Federation of Labor have said much about their intention to cease relying upon Government aid, and to go out to fight their own battles, they are counting very heavily upon Congress and the President to advance their cause and to offset such setbacks of last year as the San Francisco general strike and the textile strike. In particular, strike threats are designed, it is believed, to frighten both the Administration and Congress into supporting the Wagner trade dispute bill, which would open the way to organization under the A. F. of L. of masses of workers in industries where outside unions have made very little progress to date.

Labor Legislation Called Sure Cause for Walkouts.

Enactment of the Wagner bill, or any other piece of legislation which would ban the company union and provide for election of employe representatives for collective bargaining by majority vote, would raise a really serious threat of labor trouble, industrialists here contend. Such a step would give the American Federation of Labor unions in the rubber, motor and other industries where they have made little headway the very encouragement they need to stage walkouts. Employer groups are certain to contest such legislation on the ground of unconstitutionality.

The very litigation to prevent enforcement of such pro-union measures might of itself be sufficient to arouse resentment among employes and lead to open controversy.

In the meanwhile, a number of affected industries have built up inventories of finished products to meet any such contingency. Business activity has been stimulated to some extent during the past month by the desire to anticipate threatened labor difficulties, and such preparations will continue in the automobile and related industries for the next few weeks. This factor may be expected to make the summer seasonal recession in activity more pronounced than would otherwise have been the case.

Bank of France Loses $42,834,000 Gold

Paris, April 11 (AP).—The Bank of France lost 649,000,000 francs (about $42,834,000) in gold in the week ended April 5, one of the heaviest drainages in recent months, it was reported today.

Financial experts said this drain was mainly due to the repatriation of Belgian gold after the devaluation of the belga and to gold shipments to the United States when the dollar went above the gold export point.

Curb—Metal shares followed the action of the big board and broke into higher ground. Balance of the list showed little interest. Fajardo Sugar closed up 6 points. Trading dropped to 176,000 shares.

Grains—Slashed estimates of the winter wheat crop from Government sources swept prices up as much as 3⅝ cents. The crest of the advance brought wheat to a new high for the season. May closed nervous at 97⅞, while May corn closed at 87¼ and May oats at 48⅛.

Cotton—Prices scored the most substantial advance in some time, attributed to trade demand. Closes were steady, near the top, at net advances of 35 to 39 points. May closed at 11.56.

Sugar—Raw sugar was off 5 to 3.15, while refined closed unchanged at 4.90 for fine granulated.

Coffee—Spot coffee was steady. Rio No. 7 closed at 7, while Santos No. 4 sold last at 8¾ to 9.

Washington 2d To New York In Construction

Permits Here for 1934 Were $20,928,631 for 4,548 Buildings.

By R. Karl von Lewinski.

Estimated cost of building construction begun in Washington during 1934 ranked second only to New York in a survey of 819 cities, the United States Department of Labor reported yesterday.

Permits issued here during the 12 months called for an outlay of $20,928,631, to be divided among 4,548 buildings. New York's estimated construction cost planned during the same period amounted to $96,661,717 for the erection of 35,313 buildings.

The average cost of the projected dwelling or commercial units here led the Nation, almost doubling New York's per capita cost. While buildings averaged less than $3,000 in New York, local construction planned during the year averaged only slightly less than $5,000 per unit.

For the entire country, 1934 was the first year since 1925 to show an increase over the preceding year in the number and value of buildings for which permits were issued, the department reported further.

Reports collected from 819 cities of the United States having a population of 10,000 or over indicated that permits issued for construction contracts during the year increased 7.6 per cent in comparison with 1933. At the same time an increase of 5.5 per cent was shown in the estimated cost of all construction in these cities. For the most part this increase was due to increased expenditures for alterations, additions and repairs to existing buildings.

One-Family Dwellings Lead.

New residential buildings showed decreases in both number and estimated cost, while nonresidential buildings showed a decrease in number but an increase in estimated value. Although nonresidential buildings as a whole rose only 1.4 per cent in value, there were some very large increases in this group. For example, indicated expenditures for schools and libraries were three times as great in 1934 as during the preceding year. The value of the office buildings for which permits were issued increased by 150 per cent, and of private garages 67 per cent. Indicated expenditures for amusement buildings nearly doubled, while expenditures for church buildings increased 1.1 per cent.

During 1934 dwelling units were provided in new buildings for 29,908 families. Of this number 20,396, or 68.2 per cent, were provided in one-family dwellings, 2,216, or 7.4 per cent, in two-family dwellings and 7,296, or 24.4 per cent, in apartment houses. The preponderance of family-dwelling units provided in one-family dwellings is in striking contrast to conditions during the several years of the heavy building period. For example, in 1928 only 35.2 per cent of the family-dwelling units provided were in apartment houses.

Despite the increase, building operations in the five largest cities of the United States during 1934 totaled only about 7.3 per cent of the New York, Chicago, Philadelphia, Detroit and Los Angeles—reported a total of $138,979,268 during the past year, whereas in 1925 they accounted for an aggregate of $1,898,221,528.

Citizens Equitable Elects.

Isaac B. Nordlinger was re-elected at the annual meeting of the Citizens Equitable Building Association held at association headquarters in Georgetown, at 1207 Wisconsin avenue. All other officers and directors were retained.

Other officers include John Hadley Doyle, vice president; Harold W. Burnside secretary; Mrs. Irene B. Arendes, assistant secretary; Harry L. Selby, treasurer, and Bernard I. Nordlinger, general counsel.

Annual report of the association, which is 52 years old, showed an excellent year's business. It was announced that the organization is now offering its seventy-fourth series of stock. President Nordlinger recently retired from other active business after being a shoe merchant in Georgetown for 50 years.

Connelly Heads Enterprise.

James E. Connelly was re-elected president of the Enterprise Serial Building Association at the forty-third annual meeting, it was announced yesterday. Other officers were retained as follows: Michael A. Keene, vice president; Martin A. Cook, secretary, and G. Percy McGlue, treasurer.

The following directors were reelected: George I. Borger, Bernard R. Edwards, Maurice Fitzgerald, C. F. Gibson, P. F. Hannan, Ralph A. Judd, Edward T. Kehoe, sr., Fred Kraus and Frank J. Torrens.

The report of the association shows assets of $1,394,765.58, an increase of $26,620.56 over the assets in April, 1934. Enterprise is a serial building association issuing stock semi-annually, and is now receiving subscriptions to stock in the seventy-fourth series. Directors declared a 5 per cent dividend for the past year.

The association is a member of the District of Columbia Building and Loan League and the United States Building and Loan League.

Business Notes

Mrs. Sarah J. Lee, president of the J. William Lee's Son Co., one of the city's older funeral concerns, yesterday asked permission of the District Supreme Court to dissolve the corporation.

Her petition explained that the firm had not engaged in business for more than a year and that it had sold all of its assets and paid all of its debts. A meeting of the stockholders was held Wednesday, at which time it was agreed to dissolve the corporation.

Work-Relief Billions Big Factor In Government's Recovery Plan

Proposed Expenditure Exceeds Total Valuation of Manhattan Island and Will Require Vast Supplies of Materials and Labor.

By Claude A. Jagger,
Associated Press Financial Editor.

New York, April 11.—Industrial leaders—particularly in building and related lines—are cheered by anticipation of the Government's $4,880,000,000 work-relief expenditure program.

What such an expenditure means to business is evident from the fact that it is somewhat more than 10 per cent of the estimated total net value of all goods and services produced in the United States in 1934. Incidently, it is a little more than the total assessed valuation of Manhattan Island.

Word from the White House yesterday that it was proposed to spend as much as possible of the money in areas where the unemployed reside, that is, the populous areas, thrilled the promoters of low-cost housing and slum clearance plans, the drafters of park development schemes, backers of grade-crossing elimination and a host of others.

Direct Jobs a Purpose.

It is recognized that the Government proposes to get as much out of each of those dollars as possible, that it will endeavor to make jobs directly rather than to let the work out to contractors.

Industrial circles nevertheless hope that it means the use of huge quantities of materials as well as labor. If much of the work is construction work, it will require use of trainloads of steel, cement, lumber, bricks and other items which make up the bulk of the heavy goods lines which have been the laggards in recovery.

Of course, not all of the $4,880,000,000 is going into work-relief. The actual work-relief program is generally spoken of now as a $4,000,000,000 undertaking, and if the Government finds it can prime the pump without spending all of it, the full amount will not be spent.

Approval Not Unanimous.

In any case, it is difficult to minimize the magnitude of the figures. Total building contracts of all sorts let in the 37 States East of the Rockies in 1934, as tabulated by F. W. Dodge Corporation, amounted to only $1,700,000,000.

The work-relief program, as is well known, has not met with anything like unanimous approval in business quarters. Skeptics say pump-priming experiments have failed, that they impair business confidence, compete with private business, and otherwise hamper the country's normal economic functioning.

Larger Payment Asked of Greece On Sterling Loan

New York, April 11.—The League Loans Committee of London, on which the American bondholders are represented, and the British Council of Foreign Bondholders announce that their attention has been drawn to a notice issued by the Greek government giving instructions for the payment to bondholders of 35 per cent on coupons of the Greek government sterling loan, which fell due on April 1. These coupons were not covered by the arrangement announced on November 17, 1933, which came to and end on March 31 last.

The League Loans Committee and the Council of Foreign Bondholders have accordingly requested his majesty's government to draw the attention of the Greek government to the unilateral character of this default, in the absence of agreement with the representatives of the bondholders, and to urge the Greek governments to come to such an agreement without further delay. The standpoint of the League Loans Committee and the Council of Foreign Bondholders was set forth in their announcement February 19 last, when they expressed the opinion that it would be well within the capacity of Greece to make larger payment.

Libby, McNeill Reports Profit

Chicago, April 11.—A net profit of $3,032,288.37 for the fiscal year ended March 2, 1933, representing a gain of $825,946.62 over the previous year, is reported to shareholders by Libby, McNeill & Libby, food canners. A deficit of $2,825,249.56 at the opening of the fiscal year has been cleared away and the company now shows a balance in surplus account of $207,038.81.

The year's business showed favorable increases over the previous year in physical volume of production and both domestic and foreign distribution, Edward G. McDougall, president, said in his annual report. The company enters the new fiscal year with inventories of current production which he characterized as "normal and well balanced, and for which there is active demand."

Earnings are sufficient to cover current annual dividend requirements on both first and second preferred shares amounting to $1,368,100 and leave a balance for holders of common shares of $1,664,188.37—a return of $2.66 per share on the $10 par common shares outstanding. Earnings for the year have been retained in the business, strengthening the company's position by an increase in net working capital of $2,950,919.29.

Libbey-Owens-Ford Glass Co. reports first quarter earnings for this year of $2,219,767, compared with $1,370,997 for the same period last year. The company had 6,889 persons on its pay rolls in the first quarter, a new peak, and as a result of increased wages and steadier work the average monthly income of workers was 18.4 per cent above the same period last year, said President John Biggers.

A plan was announced for $1,700,000 of improvements to its flat glass plants here and in Charleston, W. Va.; Ottawa, Ill., and Shreveport, La. The regular quarterly dividend of 30 cents a share payable June 15 to holders of record May 31 was declared by directors.

Western Union Telegraph Co. had a net loss of $92,150 in February against a net loss of $4,538 in the same month last year. For the first two months of the year there was a net loss of $63,070 against net income of $70,519 for the like 1934 period.

Transit Orders Setting Record

First-Quarter Purchases Will Far Exceed Those of Last Year.

New York, April 11.—Orders for passenger equipment placed by transit companies in the first quarter of 1935 indicate that purchases of units for the year will far exceed those of 1934, according to information compiled by Transit Journal. For two classes of equipment, cars and trolley buses, the activity for the first quarter alone eclipses the record for the entire previous year. In the case of buses, the orders placed in the first three months show a decided increase over the corresponding period of last year. Taking all types of new equipment the value of orders in the first quarter amounts to $17,130,720, as compared with $18,664,705 for the whole year 1934.

"Bids have been asked on 500 street cars by one company. Another lot of 125 cars will be ordered as soon as commission approval is obtained. Formal authorization by PWA will release a third order involving 26 cars. The total of 651 cars to be ordered compares with only 54 purchased in 1934.

"In the first three months this year, 122 trolley buses were ordered, which is more than twice the total of 58 bought in all of 1934, and exceeding the previous record of trolley buses obtained in any one year by six units. The largest orders were those placed by the Public Service Coordinated Transport, Newark, N. J., for 62; the United Electric Railways, Providence, R. I., for 31, and the Columbus Railway, Power and Light Co., for 18.

"Bus orders for the first quarter totaled 608. Should this rate of buying continue through the remainder of the year, the total for 1935 will be 2,432 buses. This figure would compare with the 2,087 buses bought last year and the previous high record of 2,125 for any one year.

Federal Bonds Are Active But Drop Slightly

New Haven 6s a Feature With Rise of 6 Points; Italians Weak.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 11.—The bond market proved another highly selective affair today, with trends definite throughout the rather quiet session. The Government's raising of the domestic silver price to 71 cents an ounce was studied closely in the financial district and, while the silver purchasing program was thought to have long-term inflationary aspects, there were some doubts that this was a current market influence.

While trading in the corporation groups was quiet, some $4,290,000 of U. S. Government securities changed hands at declines ranging from 1-32 to 7-32 of a point. Total transfers of all bonds amounted to $12,515,000, par value. This was just about equal to Wednesday's aggregate.

There were scattered strong and weak spots in both the corporate and foreign divisions. The Associated Press averages for selected rails and utilities were about .1 of a point easier, while that for the industrials was unchanged.

Although the rails were not enthusiastic, New Haven 6s spurted 6 points to 57 and Chicago & Northwestern 4¾s gained 1¼ at 14. In the foreign category Rio de Janeiro 8s advanced 1½ points to 19 and German Central Agricultural Bank 6s were up 1⅜ at 33⅝. Italian 7s were a soft spot with a decline of 3 to 81¼.

Metals Strong InCurbTrading

Fajardo Sugar Also a Feature With Gain of 6 Points.

By the Associated Press.

New York, April 1.—Despite improvement in metal issues, the curb market generally was in an unsettled state today. A few scattered specialties were firm in light buying, while fractional declines were well distributed in other sections of the list. Transfers approximated 176,000 shares, compared with 187,000 yesterday.

Among the nonferrous issues, Sunshine Mining got up around a point on heavy dealings. Bunker Hill & Sullivan showed similar appreciations, while Lake Shore and Wright-Hargreaves were small fractions higher. A rise of some 6 points was staged by Fajardo Sugar in light trading. Safety Car Heating yielded nearly 2 points following a sharp rise yesterday.

Recessions of fractions to around a point appeared in American Gas & Electric, Electric Bond & Share, Distiller's Corporation - Seagram's, Technicolor, Newmont, Creole Petroleum and Sherwin-Williams.

Foreign Markets.

By the Associated Press.

London—Dealings were slack on the stock exchange today owing to the week-end settlement and speculators awaiting the outcome of the Stresa conference. Industrial railway and rubber issues advanced while silver shares benefited on the price rise in that metal. Gold mining, transatlantic stocks and gilt-edge securities eased on profit-taking. The market closed irregular.

Paris—A better tone of the foreign exchange reflected on the bourse today and prices opened firmly. Rentes were strong. The market closed irregular.

Berlin—Trading on the boerse was hesitant due to the small amount of orders and prices declined. The closing was quiet.

Higher Freight Disturbing Note In Steel Trade

Rates Will Add 40 Cents to Pig Iron and More to Finished Product.

Cleveland, April 11.—Further moderate reduction in iron and steel commitments, certainly of higher costs for producers and consumers, due to impending railroad freight rate advances, with strong pressure for lower prices, tended last week to unsettle the markets, states the magazine Steel.

Among leading iron and steel manufacturers price sentiment has been strengthened by the authorized rate increases, which when formulated shortly will add at least 40 cents to assembly of materials for a ton of pig iron, and 50 to 75 cents for finished steel. They also will have to absorb higher freight charges in shipping to competitive areas, while independent of this users, who pay the freight from nearest basing points, face a 7 per cent increase, up to maximum of 45 cents a gross ton.

Caught by Their Code.

Caught by their own code, which prohibits price advances during a quarter, steelmakers see the possibility of still higher costs. The coal mine parley which may result in additional fuel expense has been set for June 16, 26 days after the date when they must decide—if the code survives—on maximum iron and steel prices for third quarter.

As railroads may not take advantage of full permissible increases where water and truck competition is severe, consumers are deferring for the present all but necessary purchases. The reduction of $3 a ton on cold-finished steel bars halves the usual differential between cold and hot-rolled bars, and has led buyers of the latter to ask for a similar cut. If this should be granted it would inevitably involve plates and shapes.

The American Iron and Steel Institute has refused on a technicality to accept price advances of $2 to $8 a ton filed by sheet mills on wasters and seconds, but they are going ahead selling them at the higher levels, claiming increases on these grades do not violate the code.

ALL COINS OF THE UNITED STATES FROM A ONE-CENT PIECE TO AN EAGLE ($10) ARE SEALED IN THE WASHINGTON MONUMENT...

In the great Alpine avalanche of 1895 a great sea of ice estimated at nearly 150,000,000 cubic feet—enough to pave a 50-foot highway more than 1,000 miles long, half a foot deep—crashed down out of the mountains. It killed six men and scores of cattle. The ice fell more than 4,500 feet vertically and covered a lateral distance of about three-quarters of a mile.

So terrific was the force of the slide that it swept up and over a ridge 1,500 feet high before it spent its force on the opposite side of the valley.

All coins of the United States then in use from the nickel to the $10 gold piece were sealed in the Washington Monument's cornerstone when it was laid. In addition an old one-cent piece of 1783 was included. Other coins, including a number of 3-cent pieces, and some currency, were sealed in the top of the monument just under the metal cap when it was lowered in place at the completion of construction work.

The kingfisher, as its name indicates, feeds largely on fish. The discarded bones of the fish are used by it in lieu of feathers with which to line its nest.

Brutality Charged To Home Officials

Board Sifts Complaint Filed at Waynesboro.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Waynesboro, Pa., April 11.—Charges of inhuman treatment by Warden Samuel Frock and his wife at the Franklin County Home and threats to have the matter investigated by the grand jury were revealed today by three members of a board which conducted an investigation in the presence of the county commissioners.

The investigation sifted the charges down to three instances during a period of approximately three years.

A petition signed by 13 persons complained of inhuman and brutal treatment on the part of the warden and his wife. These signers were called as witnesses, as well as signers of the letter, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Bowders, of Waynesboro.

Only three of the signers appeared when the hearing started. Later two appeared. It was brought out that practically all of the signers had no actual knowledge of the incidents cited and only signed the petition of Cal Hobert, a former inmate of the home, who is now living in Hagerstown.

Boy Suffers Concussion.

Special Dispatch to The Post.

Frederick, Md., April 11.—Semiconscious for two days after falling from a horse, Roy Runkles, 7-year-old son of Earl Runkles, near Mount Airy, was brought to the City Hospital yesterday suffering from concussion of the brain. The accident occurred Monday on the Runkles farm.

On the Air Today

By Katherine Smith.

There is a sudden influx of hillbillies. Now WRC is breaking through with "the most stupendous program of its type on the air." This will be heard on Saturday, 8:30 p. m. It's called "Country Hi-Jinks."

Here's the line-up. Music by Horseneck Hank and his Horsecollar Symphony. Guest artists each week, this time it's Eddie Peabody, who is entertaining on stage, night club floor and air during his stay here. Yodelers from "way down under" Half-Pint Penelope, a mountain warbler; Juniper Juice Jim, the yodeling yokel; the Ballade Busters (meaning exactly that), Sob Sister Sadie, singer of songs of sweet sorrow; Sad Sam, the rustic bum who is the truth-tellinist man in Spittle Whack County, are entertainers. Judge Gallop, bless him, is the master of ceremonies.

Oh, yes, we forgot one. It's Poison Pete, cowboy crooner.

Further, N. B. C. engineers saw the item about WJSV engineers' show yesterday. N. B. C. boys sneered and said, "We'll show 'em," and are preparing to put on a show. WJSV says, "Come on and challenge—all we wanted to do was go on the air first!"

Nice people, these engineers.

Answers to two readers: Thanks, Miss Anderson, for your letter. The last we heard of Crooner Bill Higgins was that he's quit broadcasting for the time being and is steaming up and down the coast on a liner. No information concerning his address. Enoch Light is at present on the road.

To Reader Lehman, who requested information concerning Don Mario: Look for it in a later column. Biographical bits will be found on the radio page on Sunday.

Two special programs, marking the fiftieth anniversary of Walter Damrosch's career as symphony conductor and composer, are presented on WMAL today. The first at 11 a. m. is a program of Damrosch's compositions, performed by Frank Black, an orchestra and giant chorus of school children. At 10:45 p. m. you'll hear a brief snatch of "Der Meistersinger," sung at the Metropolitan Opera House and conducted by Dr. Damrosch.

High spots:

National relief program is featured on "March of Time," WJSV, 9 p. m.

Bea Lillie presents her version of "The Courtship of Miles Standish," WMAL, 9 p. m.

Mrs. Roosevelt discusses White House entertainment, WJSV, 8 p. m.

College Prom pays tribute to University of Nebraska, WMAL, 8:30 p. m.

A "new" Victor Herbert waltz is heard on concert, WRC, 8 p. m.

Alice Brady, Dick Allen and Virginia Bruce are guesting on "Hollywood Hotel" program, WJSV, 9:30 p. m.

Stoopnagle and Budd with more information about Poithboinders, WJSV, 10:35 p. m.

Celotex Co. Plan Gaining Support

75 Per Cent Bondholders Favor Reorganization.

New York, April 11.—"Support of the plan of reorganization of the Celotex Co. has already been obtained from over 75 per cent of the first mortgage bonds and 71 per cent of the debentures, 89 per cent of the trade creditors, 54 per cent of the prefered stock, and over one-third of the common stock," says a statement released today by the reorganization committee.

"Final aproval of the reorganization plan will result in the reestablishment as an adequately financed going concern of one of the largest manufacturers of building and insulating materials in the United States, employing over 750 men in manufacturing, drawing raw material from Southern cane fields, and distributing its products through 6,000 dealers. Net sales for the year ended October 31, 1934, amounted to $3,914,390, and operations showed a net deficit of $192,689.

"Under the proposed reorganization, 167,627 shares of new common stock will be outstanding. New working capital is to be supplied by the sale of 75,000 shares of the new common at $6.66 per share."

Lincoln National Life Reports 31% Gain

Fort Wayne, Ind., April 11.—A 31 per cent gain in regular paid business for the first quarter of 1935 over the corresponding period of 1934 has been made by the Lincoln National Life Insurance Co., Arthur F. Hall, president, announced today. This marks the fifteenth consecutive month this company has reported paid business increases.

"This rise in business," Mr. Hall said, "is largely accounted for by an increased demand for retirement and protection plans and salary continuation insurance. It reflects a strong desire on the part of the public for a safeguard of personal income."

Boycott Urged For War Aims

Isolation of Belligerent Nation Advocated by Vadsco Head.

New York, April 11.—Complete isolation—physical, economical, political, cultural—by the leading powers of any nation threatening the world's peace until such time as it regains its senses, was advocated today by Samuel L. Antonow, president of the Vadsco Sales Corporation.

"Few people truly appreciate the distruction of life, property and the cultural heritages of the race that a new world war must bring," Mr. Antonow said. "For a brief period perhaps, another war might bring back a measure of prosperity, as some believe, but all too soon it would tear down and destroy everything we hold dear and worthwhile.

"For any national 'bad neighbor' threatening such a catastrophe, there is only one effective answer—total, deliberate isolation, with no contact whatever with the rest of the world. No mail, telephone or telegraphic privileges, no exchange of ambassadors, no tourists' courtesies, no business exchange; in fact, no traffic of any kind with the offending nation until such time as it agrees to reform. This is the one way of safeguarding the world's peace at the present critical moment."

A great deal of the existing national ill feeling centers around the war debts and since they are not likely to be settled in cash, some other arrangement must be evolved at the earliest possible moment whereby the debtor nations can meet their obligations, Mr. Antonow stated. This would avoid placing the stigma of the fault on any nation. They would again become our good customers and all the strained feelings which now manifest themselves in ridiculous tariffs, armaments races, etc. would disappear.

Receiver Is Requested For Daughter's Estate

Quickly invoking a law signed Tuesday by President Roosevelt, Mrs. Mary E. Brashears, of 5601 Western avenue northwest, yesterday asked the District Supreme Cout to appoint a receiver for the estate of her daughter, Miss Emma G. Brashears, who disappeared eight years ago.

The new law provides a receiver may be appointed after two years for the estates of persons who disappear. Formerly it was necessary to wait seven years and then have them declared legally dead. Mrs. Brashears, in an action filed through Attorney Joseph H. Batt, said her daughter's effects were found on the banks of the Potomac near Great Falls shortly after the girl left a sanitarium. She left $336 in a local bank and accumulated salary of $77.77 at the Patent Office.

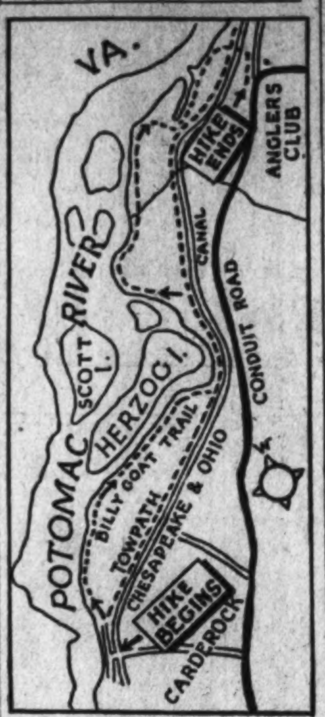
Many Wild Flowers to Be Seen By Hikers on Billygoat Trail

Wanderbirds Travel Along Gorge in Excursion This Sunday.

By Robert Shosteck.

Sunday's trip along the famous billygoat trail between Carderock and Angler's Club will afford the members of the Wanderbirds Hiking Club a splendid opportunity to become acquainted with more than 40 varieties of wild flowers which were seen in bloom by the reconnoitering party a few days ago. Along the scenic mile-long gorge between Herzog Island and the Potomac Palisade the hikers will find in profusion such rare beauties as the columbine, bluebell, trout lily and Dutchman's breeches. This wild and rocky trail, extending for eight miles to Great Falls, has been designated the billygoat trail by the group of hikers who cleared and blue-blazed most of the route and painted two charging billygoats on the face of a giant boulder near the point opposite the end of Herzog Island.



Readers of The Washington Post and club members planning to go on this trip will meet in front of The Post Building at 10 a. m. for the bus ride to Carderock. The round trip fare will be 40 cents and it is necessary to phone in reservations at National 4200 by 9 a. m. Sunday. Bring lunch and a cup and wear strong shoes. About two miles of the five-mile distance is rocky, but the trail is well cleared of brush and briers.

Blueberries to Be Seen.

The trail descends into a ravine and then follows a steep climb to a rocky promontory and a dry pine woods beyond. Here one finds the pansy violet in abundance, and pipsissewa and blueberries among the laurel. Beyond this point the blue blazes follow the precipice through a scenic, boulder-strewn region, passing many quiet pools surrounded by mossy banks and fern and lichen-clad rocks.

The path suddenly turns left down a steep cleft in the palisade. Giant boulders, some 40 to 50 feet in length, are piled against one another as if brought down by some titanic flood. Many of the crevices and shelters are large enough to accommodate a score of hikers. Along the narrow bottom one can now find the Virginia bluebell and the trout lily.

Ascending to the plateau once more, the path is hardly distinguishable save for the frequent blue paint daubs. Just before reaching the towpath at the end of this loop one is greeted by a pair of charging billygoats painted on the face of a large boulder. One enters the second loop of this trail about ¾ mile from the canal embankment opposite Herzog Island. The path skirts a number of pools and traverses open woods clothed with large pea-green patches of parasoled May-apples. On reaching the river's edge, we follow the trail to the boat landing from which point we turn right to the towpath. This rocky section of the route is not well-defined, but the trail soon descends to the bottoms where it divides, one path following the shore and the other leading to a farm house on the hill. Here the group will rest and patronize a well.

Then to Angler's Club.

The trail continues past this house downhill, skirting a field in which grape hyacinth grows in abundance. The path crosses a stream and continues along the slope to another cottage. On this hillside one can find the twin-leaf plentifully. A downhill trail leads to the river once more, and from there the group continues to a large pond.

The path on the right of this pond leads to a boathouse, and thence to the towpath. The Angler's Club is but a short distance away, on the other side of the canal. Those hikers interested in a few more miles can attempt a crossing to Cupid's Bower, an extremely rocky island about a quarter of a mile away.

The buses will meet the hikers about 5 p. m. at the Angler's Club.

The Department of Agriculture Hiking Club plans a trip to the Beltsville Experimental Farm on Saturday, starting in front of the Department of Agriculture Administration Building at 1:30 p. m. The round-trip fare will be about 50 cents. H. R. Fulton, well versed in farm activities, will lead the group making the tour, and will explain many of the interesting experiments carried on. Reservations for this trip can be made through Mildred Fraser, Bureau of Public Roads.

The trip planned for Easter Sunday will be canceled, and in its place the Wanderbirds will go on a Saturday afternoon trip from Terra Cotta to Takoma Park. Watch next Friday's Post for full details.

Capital Leads Entire Nation In Food Prices

Labor Department Survey Shows 30.3% Increase Over 1913.

A comparative scale of food costs in 51 cities, released by the Departmennt of Labor yesterday, shows that Washington leads the country in prices, with a 30.3 per cent increase over 1913. Richmond comes second, with a 28.6 per cent increase.

This comparison is the result of a Nation-wide survey, and shows that the Western States are considerably in the lead in low costs for food. The average increase for the 51 cities is 22.3 per cent.

The comparison further shows that food costs here have risen 16 per cent since February 27, 1934, with Washington again leading the 51 cities in rate of increase. In general, the survey shows retail prices for food in the larger cities have increased 2.1 per cent between January 29 and February 26 of this year.

Meats, particularly beef products, showed the highest increase among the 87 foods listed in the survey, but the increase was noticeable in all of the foods checked.

2 Judgments Signed For $2,871 Hotel Bills

Alleged unpaid hotel bills totaling $2,871, one for $1,805 and the other for $1,066, yesterday led to the signing of separate default judgments in the District Supreme Court against Lawrence Wilder, ship builder, who recently appeared before the Senate Munitions Committee, and George T. Webb, Government employe.

Wilder sued for the larger amount owed the Shoreham Hotel for a stay there several months ago, and Webb, named by the New Yorker Hotel, New York City, allegedly neglected to pay his bill when it was presented to him. Neither appeared to defend the suits.

Railroad Worker Injured.

While working beneath the railroad bridge in Potomac Park yesterday, George Brown, 26, of Philadelphia, a steel worker for the Pennsylvania Railroad, was struck by a falling bolt and suffered serious head injuries.

$50,000,000 Damages Asked of Chase Bank

New York, April 11 (AP).—A suit demanding $50,000,000 damages against the Chase National Bank and an accounting of the bank, Foreign Utilities, Ltd., a Canadian corporation, and Cyrus S. Eaton, Cleveland, Ohio, financier, was filed in supreme court today by William D. MacMillan, receiver of Continental Shares, Inc. The receiver filed a motion to examine, before trial, Albert H. Wiggin, former chairman, and four present officers.

Bookkeeping on a $33,000,000 loan to Continental Shares, Inc., allegedly arranged by Eaton to save Otis & Co., a defunct stock exchange firm, caused a loss to Continental Shares of $50,000,000, the petition contended.

California Income Tax Is Voted by Assembly

Sacramento, Calif., April 11 (AP).—Despite threats of the motion picture industry to move from California, the Assembly of the Legislature passed a State income tax measure today by a vote of 70 to 5.

Backed by the administration of Gov. Frank Merriam, the bill provides for taxation at one-third of the Federal rate. A bitter fight was expected in the Senate.

Three attempts of the Epic (end poverty in California) forces to boost the tax rates were defeated.

WATCH KIDNEYS SAME AS BOWELS
Wash Out Your 79,200 Feet of Kidney Tubes
Your bowels contain only 27 feet of intestines, yet the kidneys contain nearly 10 million tiny tubes or filters which would measure 79,200 feet if laid end to end. Therefore, it is just as important to watch the kidneys as the bowels. Kidneys are working all the time and are one of Nature's chief ways of taking the acids and poisonous waste out of the blood.
Healthy persons pass thru the bladder 3 pints a day and get rid of more than 3 pounds of waste matter. If you pass less than this, your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes may be clogged with poisonous waste. This is a danger signal and may be the beginning of nagging backache, leg pains, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swollen feet and ankles, rheumatic pains and dizziness.
Kidneys should be watched closely and need cleaning out the same as bowels. Ask your druggist for DOAN'S PILLS, an old prescription, which has been used by millions of kidney sufferers for over 40 years. They give happy relief and will help to wash out your 79,200 feet of kidney tubes. Get Doan's Pills at your druggist. © 1934, Foster-Milburn Co.
